PREFACE.

THE last edition of "Lumley" was published as long ago as 1914. The War put an end to the work of revision for some years, but, when Peace came, the work was again taken up, and every one concerned in the administration of the law of Public Health and Local Government will agree that a new edition is now urgently needed.

It was felt that this need was more pressing as regards Vol. I., and we could see no reason why this volume should not be published in advance. It will be seen that the Housing Acts are now omitted from this volume, and this calls for explanation. It has been generally understood that legislation is in contemplation in regard to these Acts, and it was felt that if the Acts were transposed to Vol. II. the outcome of any legislative activity in the present Session of Parliament could receive due attention.

The unrepealed section [9] of the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1886, or any substituted legislation was also relegated to Vol. II. for reasons which appear in the Editors' note on p. 734. Since that note was written a Bill has been introduced, and is now pending, whereby it is proposed to enact that the Milk and Dairies (Consolidation) Act, 1915, shall not come into operation before 1st September, 1925, except in so far as it repeals the Milk and Dairies Act, 1914, and the Milk and Dairies Acts Postponement Act, 1915.

In all, some forty-four Statutes have had to be considered in the course of the revision of the Work, and many of them have been inserted in extenso. Great care has been taken to ensure that the new case law, of which there is a considerable volume, has been duly inserted in the notes to the Statutes.

Mr. E. Witton Booth, of the Middle Temple, is responsible for the preparation of the Index, and Mr. Erskine Simes, of the Inner Temple, is responsible for the verification of the references in the footnotes, as well as the revision of the proof sheets of the whole Work as it has gone through the press, and our thanks are due to these gentlemen for this and valuable help given by them in other ways.

Readers are again invited to send to the publishers notes of any errors and suggestions for improvement of the book.

ADDENDA AND CORRIGENDA.

P. 25, l. 38. The decision in Hull Corporation v. N. E. Rail. Co. was affirmed by the Court of Appeal ([1916] 1 Ch. 31).

S. 36, P. H. Act, 1875, p. 98. The case of Carlton Colliery Co. v. Hemsworth R. D. C. has now been heard on appeal and the judgment of P. O. LAWRENCE, J., affirmed. The Court expressed their approval of the judgment in Nicholl v. Epping U. D. C., but laid down that the local authority must not only satisfy themselves that the accommodation is insufficient but also that conversion is the only reasonable means of making the accommodation sufficient before ordering conversion.

Note to s. 182, P. H. Act, 1875, p. 436. A bye-law excluding motor traffic from a public park over which the owner of adjoining premises had been granted a right of carriage, horse and footway subject to bye-laws for the protection of the public, etc. was held reasonable (Att.-Gen. v. Hodgson (1922), 38 T. L. R. 501).

Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1886, p. 734. The text of the Milk and Dairies (Amendment) Bill has now been published. It is proposed to suspend the operation of the Milk and Dairies (Consolidation) Act, 1915, until September 1, 1925, except in so far as it repeals the Milk and Dairies Act, 1914, and the Milk and Dairies (Postponement) Act, 1915. The existing orders and regulations will therefore continue in force. Provision is also made for the refusal and cancellation of dairymen's licences issued under local Acts, and penalties are imposed for the sale of tuberculous or adulterated milk. Power is also given to the Minister of Health to issue licences for the sale of standardised "Grade A" or "Sterilised" milk. The full text of the Bill in the form in which it becomes law will be inserted in Vol. II. with the Consolidation Act of 1915.

S. 60 (1), L. G. Act, 1894, p. 975. The word "fix" means "come to a decision as to." An order made under this subsection dividing a parish into wards but leaving the number of guardians to be elected for the whole parish unchanged is good (R. v. West Riding of Yorks C. C., Ex parte Hemsworth Guardians (1922), 86 J. P. 102).

S. 39, P. H. Act, 1907, p. 1044. This section does not limit the powers of a local authority under s. 36 of the 1875 Act (per WARRINGTON, L.J., in Carlton Colliery Co. v. Hemsworth R. D. C. (at present unreported)).

Local Government (Adjustments) Act, 1913, note (aa), p. 1085. See also Southampton C.C. v. Bournemouth Borough Council (1922), 20 L. G. R. 445.

S. 15, Representation of the People Act, 1918, p. 1097. The clerk to a council is not entitled to a superannuation allowance from the council in respect of fees received by him as registration officer (Holland v. Chelsea Borough Council (1922), 44 M. C. C. 81).

THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACTS.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH ACT, 1875.

(38 & 39 VICT. c. 55.)

An Act for consolidating and amending the Acts relating to Public Health in England. [11th August 1875.]

PART I.

Preliminary.

1. This act may be cited as "The Public Health Act, 1875." Short title.

Construction of Consolidating Acts.

This Act is for the most part a consolidation Act, repealing all previous statutes relating to the Public Health, and re-enacting them with certain amendments. The observations of BRETT, J., in R. v. Prince (1875), L. R. 2 C. C. R. 154; 39 J. P. 676, as to construing the language used in consolidation statutes, may be usefully referred to. Adverting to the use of several words or forms of expression applicable to statutory offences, he observes: "They are but differences in form; and though they be all, or though several of them be, in one consolidating statute, they are not to be construed by contrast." Then he quotes Greaves on the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, p. 3: "If any question should arise in which any comparison may be instituted between different sections of any one or several of these Acts, it must be carefully borne in mind in what manner these Acts were framed. None of them was re-written; on the contrary, each contains enactments taken from different Acts passed at different times, and with different views and frequently varying from each other in phraseology; and, for reasons stated in the introduction, these enactments for the most part stand in these Acts with little or no variation in their phraseology, and consequently their differences in that respect will be found generally to remain in these Acts. It follows, therefore, that any argument as to a difference in the intention of the legislature which may be drawn from difference in the terms of one clause from those in another will be entitled to no weight in the construction of such clauses; for that argument can only apply with force where an Act is framed from beginning to end with one and the same view, and with the intention of making it thoroughly consistent throughout." This judgment assumes that the meaning of any particular phrase in any particular section of a consolidating statute is not to be limited by its meaning in some other section, but must be determined with reference to the particular subject-matter dealt with in the particular section.

In Higgs and Hill, Ltd. v. Stepney Borough Council, [1914] 1 K. B. 505; 78 J. P. 134, CHANNELL, J., said: "When you find an inconsistency in the clauses of a consolidating Act, it may be proper to look at the respective dates of their first enactment to explain that inconsistency; but if there is no inconsistency, the court must interpret the Act as it stands without any regard to the dates of origin of its clauses."

"When once certain words in an Act of Parliament have received judicial construction in one of the superior courts and the legislature has repeated them without any alteration in a subsequent statute, I conceive that the legislature must be taken to have used them according to the meaning which a court of competent jurisdiction has given to them" (Ex parte Campbell (1870), L. R. 5 Ch. 703, per JAMES, L.J., at p. 706). See also Barlow v. Teal (1884), 15 Q. B. D. 403, per Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., at p. 405. In Mitchell v. Simpson (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 183, Lord ESHER said: "The Act (Sheriffs Act) of 1887 is a consolidation Act, and the provision in question is in substantially the same terms as that of the Act of Geo. 2, and therefore in order to determine the meaning of the provision, we must consider to what the Act of Geo. 2 was applicable."

In In re Budgett, Cooper v. Adams, [1894] 2 Ch. 557, CHITTY, J., drew a distinction between the rules for construing an amending and consolidating Act and a codifying Act: "I referred yesterday to Lord HERSCHELL'S observations in Bank of England v. Vagliano, [1891] A. C. 144, with reference to the Bills of Exchange Act. Those observations do not, in my opinion, apply to the Bankruptcy Act of 1883. The substance of what fell from Lord HERSCHELL is that where there is an Act such as the Bills of Exchange Act codifying the law, the proper rule of interpretation is to read the Act and to interpret its provisions without reference to previous decisions or to previous legislation, that being a primâ facie rule only to which there would be reasonable exceptions. As his lordship said: 'I am of course far from asserting that resort may never be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the code.' Then he gives some examples, which I need not cite at length. But I have here to deal, not with an Act of Parliament codifying the law but with an Act to amend and to consolidate the law, and therefore it is, I say, those observations do not apply, and I think it is legitimate in the interpretation of the sections in this amending and consolidating Act to refer to the previous state of the law for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the legislature." See, however, the same judge's remarks in Thames Conservators v. Smeed, Dean & Co., [1897] 2 Q. B. 334; Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., [1898] A. C. 387, per Lord MACNAGHTEN; The Fulham, [1899] P. 251, per SMITH, L.J.; Couper v. Mackenzie (1906), 8 F. 1202; Williams v. Permanent Trustee Co. of N. S. W., [1906] A. C. 249; and Wernham v. R., [1914] 1 K. B. 468, per BAILHACHE, J. In R. v. Abrahams, [1904] 2 K. B. 859, Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., said: "The contention is, and to that extent I think it is well founded, that in a consolidation Act, where there are ambiguous expressions, regard may be had to the previous Act of Parliament in pari materiâ for the purpose of interpreting those ambiguous expressions."

Extent of Act.

2. This Act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland, nor (save as by this Act is expressly provided) to the metropolis.

Under the London Government Act, 1899, s. 19, Woolwich is now part of the metropolis for all purposes, and the provisions of this Act which were made applicable to it by the P. H. (London)) A., 1891, s. 102, no longer apply to it.

Division of Act into parts.

3. This Act is divided into parts, as follows:

Part I.—Preliminary.
Part II.—Authorities for Execution of Act.
Part III.—Sanitary Provisions.
Part IV.—Local Government Provisions.
Part V.—General Provisions.
Part VI.—Rating and Borrowing Powers, etc.
Part VII.—Legal Proceedings.
Part VIII.—Alteration of Areas and Union of Districts.
Part IX.—Local Government Board.
Part X.—Miscellaneous and Temporary Provisions.
Part XI.—Saving Clauses and Repeal of Acts.

Besides these parts, the Act contains five schedules containing Rules for the proceedings of local boards, for the proceedings of committees (now repealed) for the election of members of such boards (now repealed), for the convening of meetings of owners and ratepayers, and for the proceedings thereat, forms for numerous objects and the Repeal of previous Acts.

Note to Section 3.

4. In this Act, if not inconsistent with the context, the following words and expressions have the meanings hereinafter respectively assigned to them; that is to say,

Definitions.

Effect of interpretation clauses.

In R. v. Cambridgeshire JJ. (1838), 7 A. & E. 491, Lord DENMAN, C.J., said: "We apprehend that an interpretation clause is not to be taken as substituting one set of words for another, nor as strictly defining what the meaning of a word must be under all circumstances; we rather think that it declares what persons may be comprehended within that term when the circumstances require that they should." In Att.-Gen. v. Worcester Corporation (1846), 15 L. J. Ch., at p. 399, Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., said: "The object of these Acts being framed with interpretation clauses is, by the means and through the agency of the interpretation clause, to avoid the necessity of frequent repetition in describing all the subject-matter to which the Act was intended to apply. It uses, therefore, an expression, and then, by the interpretation clause, declares that that expression shall have certain meanings other than the ordinary meaning of the word used, and the way to apply that interpretation clause is, when you find the word used in other enactments, to follow the direction of the interpretation clause, and, according to the subject-matter, to read it as if it contained the other words which by the interpretation clause it is meant to include." In Lindsay v. Cundy (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 348, BLACKBURN, J., said: "The interpretation clause is a modern innovation, and frequently does a great deal of harm, because it gives a non-natural sense to words which are afterwards used in a natural sense without noticing the distinction." In another case he said: "It is a common practice in modern Acts to introduce interpretations into Acts. I am old enough to remember when that was a novelty, and the older draughtsmen said, likely to be a very mischievous novelty. I think that experience has shown that the older draughtsmen had some reason, but the practice is now inveterate" (Portsmouth Corporation v. Smith (1885), 10 App. Cas. 364). Such a clause ought, therefore, to be strictly construed (Allsop v. Day (1861), 7 H. & N., at p. 463, per POLLOCK, C.B.). In Midland Rail. Co. v. Ambergate, etc. Rail. Co. (1853), 10 Hare, at p. 369, WOOD, V.-C., said: "With regard to all these interpretation clauses, I understand them to define the meaning, supposing there is nothing else in the Act which is opposed to the particular interpretation." And in R. v. Pearse (1880), 5 Q. B. D., at p. 389, LUSH, J., said: "An interpretation clause should be used for the purpose of interpreting words which are ambiguous or equivocal, and not so as to disturb the meaning of such as are plain." See also the observations of Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., in R. v. Sudbury Burial Board (1858), El. B. & E. 264; of WILLES, J., in Ablert v. Pritchard (1866), L. R. 1 C. P. 214; of Lord ST. LEONARDS, in Dean of Ely v. Bliss (1852), 2 De G. M. & G., at p. 471; and of Lord SELBORNE, in Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B., on p. 15, post.

It is right to notice the remark, per GIFFARD, L.J., in Ex parte Morris (1869), L. R. 5 Ch. 174: "General words will not be so construed as to destroy special exemptions or special privileges"; see also Thorpe v. Adams (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 125, and Earl of Derby v. Bury Commissioners (1869), L. R. 4 Ex. 222, where this proposition is well illustrated. In Ebbs v. Boulnois (1875), L. R. 10 Ch. 484, JAMES, L.J., observes: "It is a cardinal principle in the interpretation of a statute that if there are two inconsistent enactments, it must be seen if one cannot be read as a qualification of the other." See also on this point, Taylor v. Oldham Corporation, p. 16, post.

See further as to interpretation clauses, notes under the definitions of "union" and "street" in this section, post, pp. 6, 15.

As to the application of these definitions to incorporated enactments, see Sale v. Phillips, p. 8, post, and cases as to "street" on p. 18, post.

"Borough."

"Borough" means any place for the time being subject to the Act of the session of the fifth and sixth years of the reign of King William the Fourth, chapter seventy-six, intituled "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," and any act amending the same:

These Acts have all been repealed and for the most part re-enacted by a consolidating and amending statute, the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, which applies (s. 6) to every city and town to which the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, applied at the commencement of the Act (i.e., January 1st, 1883), and to any town, district, or place, whereof the inhabitants are incorporated after the commencement of the Act, and whereto the provisions of the Municipal Corporations Acts are under the Act extended by charter, but to no other place. For a similar definition, see the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 15.

"The Metropolis."

"The metropolis" means the city of London and all parishes and places mentioned in Schedules A., B., and C., to the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 [18 & 19 Vict. c. 120]:

For a list of the parishes and places mentioned in such Schedules, see Woolrych's Metropolis Management Acts, 3rd ed., p. 149. By the express mention of the city of London, the definition of the metropolis contained in the previous Act is rendered more exact. Note that it does not extend to the Metropolitan Police District, as to the limits of which see 10 Geo. 4, c. 44: 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, and amending Acts collected in 9 Chitty's Statutes, "Police (Metropolis)," p. 108.

Woolwich is now part of the metropolis. See the note to s. 2, ante, p. 2.

"Local government district"; "local board."

"Local government district" means any area subject to the jurisdiction of a local board constituted in pursuance of the Local Government Acts before the passing of this Act, or in pursuance of this Act, and "local board" means any board so constituted:

The "Local Government Acts" were (see Schedule V., Part I., post) the Public Health Act, 1848; the Local Government Act, 1858; the Local Government Act (1858) Amendment Act, 1861; and the Local Government Amendment Act, 1863.

As to the constitution of local government districts in pursuance of this Act, see ss. 271, 272, post.

The restricted meaning of the phrase "local board" should be noticed.

This definition is retained, as the expression is used in this Act; but by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 21 (1), post, the districts of urban sanitary authorities are now called urban districts, and local boards urban district councils.

"Improvement Act district."

"Improvement Act district" means any area for the time being subject to the jurisdiction of any Improvement Commissioners as hereinafter defined:

"Improvement Commissioners."

"Improvement Commissioners" means any commissioners, trustees, or other persons invested by any local Act with powers of town government and rating:

This definition was taken from the P. H. A., 1872, s. 60, but the term "town government" occurred in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61. It is not clear what the term implies here, as it is most appropriately applied to a municipal corporation. But the P. H. A., 1848, s. 10, suggests a reasonable explanation of the term as signifying "paving, lighting, cleansing, watching, regulating, supplying with water, or improving" any place where there is also a power of rating. Improvement Commissioners are now called urban district councils and their districts urban districts. See the L. G. A., 1894, s. 21 (1), post, p. 926.

Section 4.

"Parish."

"Parish" means a place for which a separate poor rate is or can be made, or for which a separate overseer is or can be appointed:

This definition was adopted from the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1866, s. 18. Overseers are and may be appointed for places or districts distinct from parishes. By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 5, in every Act passed after the year 1866 the expression "parish" means, unless the contrary intention appears, as respects England and Wales, a place for which a separate poor rate is or can be made, or for which an overseer is or can be appointed. Such definition supersedes that in the text, but is practically identical.

Places formerly extra-parochial.

Extra-parochial places have now practically disappeared, for by the Extra-Parochial Places Act, 1857, s. 1, every place entered separately in the report of the Registrar-General on the last census which then was or was reputed to be extra-parochial, and wherein no rate was levied for the relief of the poor, was in future for all purposes of the assessment to the poor rate to be deemed a parish; and the justices having jurisdiction in such place were to appoint overseers therein. And by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868, s. 27, every place which was or was reputed to be extra-parochial, whether entered in the Registrar-General's report or not, for which no overseer had been appointed, or was then acting, or which had not then been annexed to and incorporated with an adjoining parish under s. 4 of the Act of 1857, was for all civil parochial purposes to be annexed to and incorporated with the next adjoining parish with which it had the largest common boundary, and in case there should be two or more parishes with which it had boundaries of equal extent, then with that parish which contained the lowest amount of rateable value. Portions of Windsor Castle, Exeter Castle Yard, Lundy Island and certain other islands and lighthouses are still extra-parochial.

Land between high and low water marks; accretions from the sea.

Formerly, when a parish extended up to the sea-shore or a tidal river, but there was nothing to show whether it did or did not extend beyond the line of ordinary or medium high water, land below such high-water line could not be assumed to be within the parish (Duke of Bridgewater's Trustees v. Surveyors of Highways of Bootle-cum-Linacre (1866), L. R. 2 Q. B. 4; 30 J. P. 725; see also R. v. Musson (1858), 22 J. P. 609; 8 El. & Bl. 900; McCannon v. Sinclair (1859), 23 J. P. 757; 2 El. & El. 53; Ipswich Dock Commissioners v. St. Peter's, Ipswich (1866), 30 J. P. 820; 7 B. & S. 310). But by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868, s. 27, every accretion from the sea, whether natural or artificial, and the part of the sea-shore to the low-water mark, and the bank of every river to the middle of the stream, which on December 25th, 1868, had not been included within the boundaries of or annexed to and incorporated with any parish, was for all civil parochial purposes annexed to and incorporated with the parish to which such accretion, part, or bank adjoined in proportion to the extent of the common boundary. In Blackpool Pier Co. v. Fylde Union (1877), 46 L. J. M. C. 189; 41 J. P. 344, a pier was constructed of a wooden deck resting on iron piles driven into the sands, so that the water flowed under it, and no alteration was made in the line of low water. It was held that the part of the pier beyond low-water mark, being beyond the realm, was neither extra-parochial nor an accretion from the sea within s. 27, and as such annexed to the parish. In Barwick v. S. E. Ry. Co., [1921] 1 K. B. 187; 85 J. P. 65, it was held that the widening of a pier at Dover which resulted in the reclamation from the sea of about 12 acres of land was an accretion within s. 27, and as such annexed to the parish. The widening was effected by the construction of solid masonry walls and chalk filling in the intervening space.

In a recent Scotch case it was held that the boundary of a burgh fixed by statute as "low-water mark" of the sea, followed that mark as it varied from time to time through natural fluctuation or was altered by artificial operations; and that accordingly, piers consisting of solid structures of stone, erected so as to extend below the natural low-water mark, were situated wholly within the burgh (Leith Docks Commissioners v. Leith Magistrates, [1911] S. C. 1139; followed in Christie v. Leven Magistrates, [1912] S. C. 678). See also Fearon v. Warrenpoint U. D. C., in notes to the P. H. A., 1907, s. 94, post. For the general law as to accretion, see Att.-Gen. v. McCarthy, [1911] 2 I. R. 260. In A.-G. of Southern Nigeria v. Holt & Co., [1915] A. C. 599, it was held that certain reclaimed lands which were the result of Note to Section 4. artificial works carried out by the respondents vested in the Crown, but subject to the riparian rights and easements of the respondents.

"Union." "Union" means a union of parishes incorporated or united for the relief or maintenance of the poor under any public or local Act of Parliament (a), and includes (b) any parish (c) subject to the jurisdiction of a separate board of guardians:

"Guardians." "Guardians" means any persons or body of persons by whom the relief of the poor is administered in any union (d):

(a) Before the L. G. A., 1894, the union, exclusive of any urban district within it, was coterminous with the rural sanitary district. Unions were mostly formed under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76; a few were constituted under special local Acts, but these were urban districts. Since the Act of 1894 the rural district is no longer necessarily coterminous with the rural part of the union, which may include more than one rural district. See ibid., s. 24 (5), post.

"Means"; "includes." (b) In R. v. Kershaw (1856), 20 J. P. 741; 6 El. & Bl. 1007, ERLE, J., points out the distinction between the words include and mean in the same interpretation section, the former having an extending and the latter an excluding effect. But the word "include" may be equivalent to "mean and include" and so have an excluding effect (Dilworth v. Commissioner of Stamps, [1899] A. C. 99). See further as to its meaning, Worsley v. South Devon Rail. Co. (1851), 16 Q. B. 539; Ex parte Ferguson (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 280, 291, per BLACKBURN, J.; 35 J. P. 468; Jones v. Cook (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 505; 35 J. P. 403; Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B., per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 194; 36 J. P. 468; Baker v. Portsmouth Corporation (1877), 3 Ex. D. 4, 157; Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B. on p. 15, post; Nutter v. Accrington L. B. (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 375; 43 J. P. 635. A provision that some term shall "extend to" or "apply to" certain specified things or persons does not necessarily exclude some other thing or person within its natural meaning (Doe v. Benham (1845), 7 Q. B. 976; Regent's Canal and Dock Co. v. London C. C. (1909), 73 J. P. 276; 7 L. G. R. 680).

"Extend to"; "apply to."

(c) For parishes and places out of the metropolis under a separate board of guardians, see the Poor Law General Orders, 2nd ed., by Macmorran and Naldrett, p. 306. Some of these are urban sanitary districts of themselves, or contain such within their area.

(d) This word includes a parish under a separate board of guardians (see supra).

"Person." "Person" includes any body of persons, whether corporate or unincorporate:

In the P. H. A., 1848, s. 2, this word was applied to corporations aggregate or sole. It is presumed that the latter are included here.

In Pharmaceutical Society v. London and Provincial Supply Association, Ltd. (1880), 5 App. Cas. 857; 45 J. P. 20, Lord SELBORNE, at p. 861, said: "There can be no question that the word 'person' may, and I should be disposed myself to say primâ facie does, in a public statute, include a person in law: that is, a corporation, as well as a natural person. But although that is a sense which the word will bear in law, and which, as I said, perhaps ought to be attributed to it in the construction of a statute unless there should be any reason for a contrary construction, it is never to be forgotten that in its popular sense and ordinary use it does not extend so far. Statutes, like other documents, are constantly conceived according to the popular use of language; and it is certain that this word is often used in statutes in a sense in which it cannot be intended to extend to a corporation. That accounts for the frequent occurrence in some statutes, in interpretation clauses, of an express declaration that it shall extend to a body politic or corporate."

By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 2 (1) (re-enacting 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 14): "In the construction of every enactment relating to an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction, whether contained in an Act passed before or after the commencement of this Act, the expression 'person' shall, unless the contrary intention appears, include a body corporate." And by ibid., s. 19: "In this Act and in every Act passed after the commencement of this Act the expression 'person' shall, unless the contrary intention appears, include any body of persons corporate or unincorporate." Note to Section 4.

In the following cases the word has been held to include a corporation: Pearks, Gunston and Tee, Ltd. v. Ward, [1902] 2 K. B. 1; 66 J. P. 774; In re Thompson's Trusts, [1905] 1 Ch. 229; R. v. Antrim JJ., [1906] 2 I. R. 298; Hirst v. West Riding Union Banking Co., [1901] 2 K. B. 560; Chuter v. Freeth and Pocock, Ltd., [1911] 2 K. B. 832; 75 J. P. 430; R. v. Ascanio Puck & Co., Ltd. (1912), 76 J. P. 487; 29 T. L. R. 11; and cf. R. v. Gainsford (1913), 29 T. L. R. 359 ("occupier"); Evans v. London C. C. (1914), 30 T. L. R. 509 ("occupier"); in the following it was held not to do so: Pharmaceutical Society's Case, supra; Wills v. Tozer (1904), 53 W. R. 74; Walker v. Richardson (1837), 2 M. & W. 882; O'Duffy v. Jaffe, [1904] 2 I. R. 27; Mylam v. Market Harborough Advertiser Co., Ltd., [1905] 1 K. B. 708; Hawke v. E. Hulton & Co., Ltd., [1909] 2 K. B. 93; 73 J. P. 295

As to when the word does or does not include an infant, a woman, or a married woman, see cases collected in In re Royal Naval School, [1910] 1 Ch. 806, and Bebb v. Law Society, [1914] 1 Ch. 286.

As to the meaning of "person" in a lease, see Willmott v. London Road Car Co., [1910] 2 Ch. 525.

"Local authority" means urban sanitary authority and rural sanitary authority: "Local authority."

See s. 5, post, p. 37.

"Surveyor" includes (a) any person appointed by a rural authority to perform any of the duties of surveyor under this Act (b): "Surveyor."

(a) See as to the meaning of this word, note (b) on p. 6, ante.

(b) This word is thus defined with reference to a rural sanitary authority because such an authority may not in many cases appoint a special officer as their surveyor under this Act. See s. 190, post, as to the powers of a rural authority to appoint officers or servants.

"Lands" and "Premises" include messuages buildings lands easements and hereditaments of any tenure: "Lands"; "premises."

The definition of premises avoids difficulties in the interpretation of the word, such as arose with reference to s. 3 of the Factory Act, 1867, in Kent v. Astley (1869), L. R. 5 Q. B. 19, and Redgrave v. Lee (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 363. As the context may in any particular case require a departure from the definition, reference may be made to cases in which the meaning of the word in a local Act was discussed (Metropolitan Water Board v. Paine, [1907] 1 K. B. 285; 71 J. P. 63; Metropolitan Water Board v. Johnson, [1913] 3 K. B. 900; 77 J. P. 384).

By the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 3, in every Act passed after the year 1850, unless the contrary intention appears, the expression "land" includes messuages, tenements, and hereditaments, houses and buildings of any tenure. That definition omits "easements." It was intimated in Oldacre v. Hunt (1855), 6 De G. M. & G., at p. 390, that the word "land," as defined by the P. H. A., 1848, s. 2, included a right of fishery. The Lords Justices gave no express decision on this point; but it is to be observed that the definition in that section did not include the word easement, which was introduced into the present definition as a new term. A right of water to a mill is an easement (Cleckheaton U. D. C. v. Firth (1898), 62 J. P. 536). Land. Easements.

The term hereditaments includes every kind of property that can be inherited. Hereditaments are corporeal or incorporeal. The former are tangible, and are practically the same as land; the latter are not tangible, but are the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of land, e.g., tithes, rents, rights of common, etc. Hereditaments.

Note to Section 4.

A church was held not to be "land" within the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, s. 77 (Angell v. Paddington Vestry (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 714; 32 J. P. 742; and see Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379). A railway was carried across a new street by an arch. On one side of the street it was carried forward on arches, and on that side was a strip of land ten feet wide left open for the purpose of repairing the arches; this abutted for ten feet on the street. On the other side the railway was carried forward on an embankment, and the sloping part of the embankment abutted on the street about thirty-six feet; at the foot of the embankment was an open space about thirty-six feet wide, also abutting on the street, and left for the purpose of allowing of slips in the embankment. It was held that the railway company were liable to contribute to the expenses of paving the street as owners of land within s. 77, supra (Higgins v. Harding (1872), L. R. 8 Q. B. 7; 37 J. P. 677; and see G. E. Rail. Co. v. Hackney District Board, on p. 12, post). See also the next note.

"Owner."

"Owner" means the person for the time being receiving the rack-rent of the lands or premises in connection with which the word is used, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such lands or premises were let at a rack-rent:

"Means."

The word means appears to be restrictive, and to imply that what follows is to be the only interpretation of the word owner, so that an owner in fee who has let land on a nominal ground rent is not within the definition. See note (b) on p. 6, ante, and cases, infra.

This definition applies in construing the provisions of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, as to fires, incorporated by s. 171. See Sale v. Phillips, [1894] 1 Q. B. 349; 58 J. P. 460.

Intermediate lessors as owners.

By the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, s. 2, the word owner included any person receiving the rent of the property in respect of which the word was used from the occupier of such property, on his own account, or as trustee or agent for any other person. A. was lessee for twenty-one years, at a rack-rent, of a house and shop; he occupied the shop himself, and sublet the upper part of the house to B. as a yearly tenant. The upper part was shut off from the shop, and A. had no access to it. A privy in the upper part of the house caused a nuisance arising from defective construction of a structural convenience: and the authority proceeded against C., who received the rent from A. as agent for A.'s landlord:—Held, that C. was not owner, as he did not receive the rent from B., who was the occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arose, and of which A. was the owner (Cook v. Montague (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 418; 37 J. P. 53). It is to be observed that the words "from the occupier of such property," which occur in the Nuisances Removal Act, are not in the text. It appears from the cases cited below that where there are intermediate lessors, and the rent received by each is the same, the person ultimately receiving the rent is the owner; but that a lessor receiving from his lessee more rent than he pays, is the owner within this definition. In Rice v. White, [1904] 2 I. R. 8, parts of a tenement were sublet to weekly tenants by F., who herself occupied the residue of the tenement. The annual value of the premises under the Valuation Acts was £38. F. was lessee for a term of 31 years at a yearly rent of £34. The rents received from the sub-tenants amounted in all to £107 a year, and the letting value of the rooms retained by F. was £19 per year. It was held (applying Bowen v. James (1882), 10 L. R. Ir. 26) that F. was the owner of the premises for the purposes of the P. H. (Ireland) A., 1878, in which the definition of "owner" is the same as in this Act. In Walford v. Hackney Board of Works (1894), 43 W. R. 110, H. let premises to W. for a term of years at the rent of £25, subsequently increased to £31; W. sublet the premises, agreeing to accept the same rent as he himself paid, and paid it over to H. without any deductions; it was held that W. was not the "owner" of the premises. In Truman, Hanbury, Buxton & Co. v. Kerslake, [1894] 2 Q. B. 774; 58 J. P. 766, it was held that where the lessee of premises not let at a rack-rent has sublet them for his whole term, less a few days, the rent reserved and the covenants and conditions being the same as in the original lease, the sub-lessee, and not the lessee, is the "owner" within this definition. In Field & Sons v. Southwark Borough Council (1907), 71 J. P. 240; 96 L. T. 646, the leaseholders of a house and premises, let them to B., who covenanted not to sublet. He then, without their consent, sublet each floor to a separate tenant. The water supply of the house would have been sufficient if it had been in the occupation of one tenant, but the only water supply available for the tenant of the top floor was that provided by a tap in the yard. It was held that no order could be made against the leaseholders as "owners" under s. 48 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, to abate the nuisance of there being an insufficient supply for the top floor, since the house could not be treated as an occupied house for the purposes of s. 48, in which the words "occupied house" mean a "structure as let," and since, even if it could be so treated, the leaseholders not being in receipt of the rack-rent, were not "owners" within the Act. See also cases decided under the London Building Acts on p. 10, post.

It being admitted that a plaintiff held certain premises as tenant of F. under a lease dated in 1883, the plaintiff put in evidence such lease by which F.'s predecessor leased the premises to the plaintiff's predecessor, for the residue (less seven days) of a term of eighty years from 1840, at a rent of £60 per annum. It was held that the plaintiff had given some, but not satisfactory evidence, that F. was receiving a "rack-rent," and was therefore "owner" within this definition (Wareham and Dale, Limited v. Fyffe (1910), 74 J. P. 249; 8 L. G. R. 620).

Occupiers under building agreements.

The Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 250, defines "owner" in the same words as the text. The builder of houses abutting on a new street occupied the land under a building agreement, by which the owner of the land agreed to demise to the builder, or his nominees, the several pieces of land upon which he was to build, as the houses and buildings respectively became erected and covered, for eighty years, at the rent of a peppercorn for two years, and of sums increasing every year up to £364 in the sixth and following years. He was to be considered as holding the undemised portion on the terms of the leases. There was a power of re-entry upon non-completion of the building covenants. The houses, at the date when the expenses which were the subject of the action were incurred, were in every stage of progress, and some had been demised to other persons at the builder's nomination:—Held, that with the exception of the houses so demised to other persons, he was liable as owner of all the premises. Per BLACKBURN, J.: "He was in actual occupation; his peppercorn rent was to be raised to a ground rent. There could not be a reason for saying that the freeholder was receiving the rack-rent. It may be a substantial rent, but not such as to prevent the defendant from being the owner" (Poplar Board of Works v. Love (1874), 29 L. T. 915). In Lady Holland v. Kensington Vestry (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 565; 31 J. P. 758, A., being owner in fee of land, entered into a building agreement, whereby B. agreed to build certain houses on part of the land, and to lay out the remainder as a garden for the exclusive use of tenants of the houses, and A. agreed to grant to B. a lease of each house as it was built, and of the garden with the last house; and it was expressly agreed that B. should have no interest in any house or land until a lease of it was granted. B. built some of the houses, but not all, and laid out the garden, and A. subsequently sold the reversion of the houses which were built to C. The vestry, having paved a road running past the garden, claimed repayment of the expense from A. It was held that A. was the owner of the garden, and therefore liable. Per WILLES, J.: "If the houses had been all built, and B. had obtained a lease of the garden, he would have been trustee for the inhabitants of the houses under the section. But at present A. is the legal owner, subject only to certain easements possessed by the inhabitants of the houses that have been built, and to the consideration that if and when certain acts are done she will be bound to grant the legal estate to B. It may be that she only holds as trustee for the inhabitants of the houses, but it is not only the beneficial owner, but the owner who holds as trustee for others, that is liable to make the payments under the Acts." This decision was followed in Driscoll v. Battersea Borough Council, [1903] 1 K. B. 881; 67 J. P. 264. In that case the building agreement, which described the freeholder as the intended lessor, and the builder as the intended lessee, was to the effect that the builder might enter upon and retain possession of the land in question, and should erect thirty-two houses thereon. Until leases had been granted of all the plots the builder was to pay to the freeholder a rent of £200 per annum (which was not in fact a rack-rent), or so much thereof as should not have been reserved by leases actually granted. On the completion of each house, and on payment of all moneys due, the freeholder was to grant a lease for ninety-nine years. The freeholder had power to distrain for any part of the £200. It was expressly provided that the contract was to operate as an agreement only, and not as an actual demise of the premises, or to give the builder any legal interest therein until the contemplated leases of the completed houses were executed. The £200 was duly paid, but no houses had been erected or buildings commenced. See also cases decided under the London Building Acts, infra.

"Ownership" under London Building Acts.

The Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, s. 3 (now replaced by the London Building Act, 1894, s. 5 (29)), provided that the word owner should apply to every person in possession or receipt either of the whole or of any part of the rents or profits of any land or tenement, or in the occupation of such land or tenement, other than as a tenant from year to year or for any less term, or as a tenant at will. It was held that an owner of land in fee simple, who let it on a building lease at a peppercorn rent, was not liable as owner, such a rent not being within the meaning of the section (Evelyn v. Wychcord (1858), 22 J. P. 658; El. B. & E. 126). And see List v. Tharp, [1897] 1 Ch. 260; 61 J. P. 248. In Caudwell v. Hanson (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B. 55; 36 J. P. 470, a freeholder agreed with L. to grant him long leases of certain plots of land, so soon as L. should have erected houses thereon, at a peppercorn rent until June 24th, 1870, and afterwards at £28 a year. L. built houses which were roofed in about September, 1870, but leases had not been granted. It was held that L. was the "owner" thereof, and that it was immaterial whether his title was legal or equitable only. And see to the same effect St. Helen's Corporation v. Riley (1883), 47 J. P. 471. In Cowen v. Phillips (1863), 33 Beav. 18, it was held that a tenant in possession, having an equitable interest only under an agreement for a lease for a term of three years, was in equity an owner under this section. In Hunt v. Harris (1865), 19 C. B. (N.S.) 13, the lessee of a house for a long term who had sublet it in different portions to different tenants, and who was in receipt of the rents from such sublettings, was held to be the owner of the party-wall of such house within the meaning of the above section, notwithstanding that the sublettings created a greater interest in the subtenants than that of a yearly tenancy. The last mentioned case and Cowen v. Phillips, supra, were discussed in Fillingham v. Wood [1891] 1 Ch. 51. There it was held that a tenant in possession of part of a house under an agreement for a greater interest than as tenant from year to year was an adjoining owner entitled to be served with a party-wall notice under the Act, and that service on a person in receipt of the whole of the rents of the tenement was not sufficient. In Mourilyan v. Labalmondiere (1861), 25 J. P. 340; 1 El. & El. 533, the appellants were seised in fee of a building used as a chapel which they had let on lease for twenty-one years. It was held that they were not, but that the lessee was, the owner within the meaning of the section. In R. v. Lee (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 75; 43 J. P. 302, it was held that the incumbent of a district church was not the owner within the above section, although the freehold of the church was vested in him, as he neither received the rents or profits of the church nor was in occupation of it. But in Folkestone Corporation v. Woodward (1872), L. R. 15 Eq. 159, where it was held that a church was a house for the purposes of a local Act prescribing a building line, a perpetual curate, in whom the freehold was vested, was held to be the owner. In Regent's Canal and Dock Co. v. London C. C. (1909), 73 J. P. 276; 7 L. G. R. 680, it was held that a canal company were owners within the meaning of the section of a bridge across their canal which they had built as part of the canal undertaking.

Churches and chapels.

As to the "ownership" of churches and chapels under the London Building Acts, see cases, supra. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in whom a church not built by them was vested, were held not to be the owners for the purposes of the Metropolis Management Acts (Angell v. Paddington Vestry (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 714; 32 J. P. 742). By the Church Building Acts Amendment Act, 1845, s. 13, the "freehold of the site of every church" of which the commissioners therein mentioned shall accept a conveyance under the Church Building Acts (as to any church not yet consecrated, when the same shall be consecrated), shall vest in the incumbent. Land having been conveyed under the Church Building Acts to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as a site for a church, a church was afterwards erected on a part of the land, and the church and a part only of the land were consecrated:—Held, that upon such consecration, the whole of the land so conveyed to the commissioners vested in the incumbent; that the commissioners ceased to be the owners of it, and were therefore not liable under the Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 and 1862, to contribute in respect of it towards the cost of paving a new street (Plumstead District Board of Works v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, [1891] 2 Q. B. 361; 55 J. P. 791). The position of an incumbent in respect of poor rates on land acquired as a burial ground under the Church Building Acts was recently discussed in Winstanley v. North Manchester Overseers, [1910] A. C. 7; 74 J. P. 49. The trustees of a dissenting chapel, registered as a place of religious worship, were held liable for paving expenses under the Metropolis Management Acts, as the owners of a house in Caiger v. St. Mary, Islington, Vestry (1881), 50 L. J. M. C. 59; 45 J. P. 570. And a leasehold chapel vested in trustees on trust, to permit it to be used as a place of religious worship by a congregation of Wesleyans, was held to be a house within the meaning of the same Acts, and the trustees were held to be owners thereof, on the ground that by consent of the landlord, the trustees, and the cestuis que trustent, the trusts might at any moment be put an end to (Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379; 50 J. P. 436). The defendants were trustees of a chapel consisting of two floors. The upper floor was the chapel itself, and the lower contained a lecture hall and several smaller rooms. The upper floor was exclusively appropriated to public religious worship, and the premises as a whole were registered as a place of religious worship. The lecture hall was used for the purpose of a Sunday school and of an institute, the members of the latter paying a subscription, and lectures and concerts were from time to time given in the hall in connection with the institute, for which tickets were sold to persons who were not members; but the money received did not cover the cost of the entertainments. A bazaar and a sale of work had also been held in the lecture hall, when a charge was made for admission. The money realised from the bazaar was handed to one of the defendants, and appropriated by him to the chapel building fund, and the proceeds of the sale of work were devoted to the purchase of a piano for the institute. The defendants, who had no beneficial interest in the chapel, having failed to comply with a notice under s. 150 of this Act requiring them to pave, etc. the portion of the street upon which the chapel abutted, the complainants executed the work, and obtained an order of justices for repayment by the defendants of the expenses incurred:—Held: that the defendants were the "owners" of the premises, that they did not come within s. 151, which exempts from liability "the incumbent or minister of any church, chapel, or place appropriated to public religious worship," and that the order of the justices was therefore rightly made (Hornsey L. B. v. Brewis (1890), 60 L. J. M. C. 48; 55 J. P. 389).

Roads.

The owner of private roads was held to be "owner" of land within the Metropolis Management Acts (Pound and Lord Northbrook v. Plumstead Board of Works (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B. 183; 36 J. P. 468). But a land society which had set out and dedicated roads to the public, and sold off the building plots fronting them, was held by the Exchequer Chamber not to be owners of land within the Act (Plumstead Board of Works v. British Land Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 203; 39 J. P. 376) Lord COLERIDGE, C.J., distinguished Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works, supra, on the ground that Lord Northbrook had there "for his own purposes determinately reserved his property in the private roads to himself. He might at any time have put an end to the dedication of them to his own tenants, which was all he had ever done. There was no dedication of it to the public, and there was nothing done past recall." Also, referring to Angell v. Paddington Vestry, supra, he indicated an opinion that when expenses are sought to be recovered under such Acts as the P. H. Acts from persons as owners of land, it is not enough that they should be owners of land or houses, "for real property purposes," but they must be "the owners of land which could be let at a rack-rent within the meaning of the statute." It may be observed in this connection, that the owner of the soil of a street dedicated to public use as a highway may be properly described as owner of land for real property purposes, although by reason of the highway being incapable of being Premises not lettable at a rack-rent.

Note to Section 4.

let at a rack-rent, he cannot, as such owner, be charged with such expenses as paving expenses. So, too, damage to a road by traffic has been held to be damage to "property" (Croydon R. D. C. v. Sutton District Water Co. (1908), 72 J. P. 217). The decision in Plumstead Board of Works v. British Land Co., supra, was followed by POLLOCK, B., in Hampstead Vestry v. Cotton (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 475; 50 J. P. 453. It was also followed in Macey v. Executors of James (1917), 81 J. P. 213. where it was held that a person who is the owner of the soil of a public highway is not an owner within this section so as to be liable under s. 94, post, p. 176, to abate a nuisance alleged to exist upon the highway. In Wright v. Ingle, supra, BOWEN, L.J., said: "The section does not confine the term 'owner' to those persons who could receive a rack-rent from the particular premises, or who could let them at a rack-rent; it includes those persons who would receive the rack-rent if the premises were let at a rack-rent, and I think Bowditch v. Wakefield L. B., infra, is a conclusive authority, if authority were wanted, to show that a man is not the less the owner of premises because, by the provisions of the deed under which he holds them, they cannot, so long as he holds them, be let at a rack-rent. Whether in the case of premises which were prevented by an Act of Parliament from being let at a rack-rent, there ever could be an owner within the meaning of the section I very much doubt. I am inclined to think that if the incapacity to be let were stamped upon the premises, they never could have an owner within the meaning of the section."

In G. E. Rail. Co. v. Hackney District Board of Works (1883), 8 App. Cas. 687; 48 J. P. 52, a street was carried over a railway cutting by a bridge, the parapets of which consisted of two walls resting upon arches, which had their foundations outside the lines of the roadway in the company's land. The walls were not used otherwise than as fences for the bridge. It was held that the company were not liable for paving expenses as owners of land abutting on the street. "The bridge is, by the statute, dedicated to public use, and its fence walls are provided for public protection; and if the ownership and control of the walls is in the company, it is so for public purposes; and subject to the obligation of perpetual maintenance, unless and until some other good and sufficient fences shall be provided by the company in their stead for the public protection. The company could not let the walls at a rack-rent; and if they might use them for any purpose, it must be a use subordinate to the public purposes to which the bridge, as a structure, is in its whole devoted." This case was distinguished in Williams v. Wandsworth District Board of Works (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 211; 48 J. P. 439. There the appellant was held to be chargeable as owner of a strip of land, four inches wide and 265 feet in length, upon which he had erected a boundary fence in pursuance of a covenant made with the adjoining owner (his vendor) to erect and for ever maintain a fence thereon. Cf. Elsdon v. Hampstead Corporation, [1905] 2 Ch. 633; 69 J. P. 434; and Hampstead Borough Council v. Western (1907), 71 J. P. 565. By a special Act it was provided that for the protection of the owners of certain land taken for sidings, a railway company should leave a strip of land twenty feet wide along the whole length of a certain road, and at their own expense plant and maintain trees thereon to the satisfaction of the owners, and fence it off from the road. The company left the strip of land accordingly, and planted and fenced it off. The court held that as the burden on the strip of land was imposed for the benefit of individuals who might release it, the land was not incapable for ever of being let at a rack-rent, and that therefore the company were the "owners" thereof, and were liable to contribute towards the expenses of paving the road (Hampstead Corporation v. Midland Rail. Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 538; 69 J. P. 133).

Commons.

In Re Christchurch Inclosure Act, Meyrick v. Att.-Gen., [1894] 3 Ch. 209; 58 J. P. 556, the lord of a manor was held liable for paving expenses as owner of a common, which was originally waste of the manor, and was afterwards by an Inclosure Act allotted to the lord, subject to the turbary rights of certain cottages: it was assumed that the Act prevented him from letting it.

Bed and banks of navigable rivers.

The Thames Conservators were a public body in whom were vested by statute the bed of the river and its shores within the flux and reflux of the tides. The Acts regulating their duties gave them various powers for the improvement of the navigation, but gave them no power of scavenging or removing nuisances; their power of raising funds, and the application of the funds when raised, were strictly limited, and did not include a power to raise money for the sanitary improvement of the river. It was held that under their statutes they were owners of the soil and foreshore for certain specified purposes only, and were not owners thereof so as to be liable to abate a nuisance thereon under the P. H. (London) A., 1891 (Thames Conservators v. Port of London Sanitary Authority, [1894] 1 Q. B. 647; 58 J. P. 335). The Lee Conservancy Board, incorporated for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Lee, owned a strip of land about twenty-six feet wide, which had been acquired by their predecessors for the purpose of strengthening the river bank. By various statutes the board were empowered—inter alia—to construct locks, docks, wharves, etc.; to sell, or otherwise dispose of any lands vested in them which were not required for their statutory purposes, and to charge tolls; but they were not empowered to make a profit. It was provided that the payment of expenses incident to all powers and duties under the Acts should be considered as among the purposes for which income received under those Acts was by law applicable. It would be possible for the board, if they chose to substitute a retaining wall, to dispose of a portion of the land which would then be no longer required. The Court of Appeal held that the nature of the undertaking of the board, and the conditions under which it was carried on, did not place the land in question extra commercium, or make it incapable of being let at a rack-rent, and that therefore the board were "owners" thereof within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts, and liable to contribute to the expenses of making up a new street upon which the land abutted (Hackney Borough Council v. Lee Conservancy Board, [1904] 2 K. B. 541; 68 J. P. 485).

Cemetery.

The respondents were a cemetery company incorporated by Act of Parliament whereby it was provided that part of the cemetery should be set apart for the interment of the dead according to the rites of the Church of England, and might be consecrated for that purpose, and when so consecrated should for ever thereafter be set apart and applied exclusively for the uses of Christian burial. Under their Act the company had power to sell the exclusive right of burial in vaults in perpetuity or for a limited period, but were prohibited from selling or disposing of any land which had been consecrated or set apart or used for the burial of the dead. It was held that as the company were owners in fee of the land with the power of letting or selling the land for the purposes of interment, and as, moreover, there was nothing to prevent them from letting it or part of it to another cemetery company at a rack-rent so long as it was used as a cemetery, they were liable as owners to contribute towards the expenses of paving a road which bounded the consecrated part of the cemetery (St. Giles, Camberwell, Vestry v. London Cemetery Co., [1894] 1 Q. B. 699; 58 J. P. 382).

Schools.

A trustee of a National School was held to be an "owner" thereof (Bowditch v. Wakefield L. B. (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 567; 36 J. P. 197). Under the School Sites Act, 1841, s. 6, a piece of land was conveyed in the form given in s. 10 to trustees for ever for purposes of the Act, as a site for a National School "and for no other purpose whatever"; and the school was erected. In proceedings against the trustees to recover paving expenses under s. 150, apportioned upon them in respect of the school, it was held that as under the School Sites Act the premises might in certain events be sold or exchanged, or might be transferred to a School Board at a rent under the Education Acts, the premises were not so incapacitated from ever being let at a rack-rent as to prevent the trustees from being liable as owners (Hornsey U. D. C. v. Smith, [1897] 1 Ch. 843). A site granted under s. 2 of the Act of 1841 is subject to a reverter clause in favour of the grantor. See Att.-Gen. v. Shadwell, [1910] 1 Ch. 92.

Recreation grounds.

Under a scheme made pursuant to the Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866, and confirmed by the Metropolitan Commons Supplemental Act, 1873, Tooting Bec Common was vested in the Metropolitan Board of Works (predecessors of the London C. C.) for the use of the public. The scheme provided that the common should be regulated and managed by the Board, and that no houses or buildings should be erected upon it except such lodges or buildings as might be necessary for its management and maintenance. There was a lodge on the common occupied by an inspector employed by the council, a deduction being made from his wages in respect of his occupation. There was a refreshment house on the common let to a contractor at a rental of £30 a year, and rights of grazing were also let for about £20 a year. The expenditure in respect of the common always exceeded the receipts therefrom. The Court of Appeal held (overruling Fulham Vestry v. Minter, infra), that the County Council were not "owners" within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts (London C. C. v. Wandsworth Borough Council, [1903] 1 K. B. 797; 67 J. P. 215). In Fulham Vestry v. Minter, [1901] 1 K. B. 501; 65 J. P. 180, a Divisional Court had held that an open space acquired by a local authority, under the Open Spaces Acts, 1877 and 1881, by deed which provided that the land should be maintained for the perpetual use thereof by the public for exercise and recreation, might nevertheless not be land incapable of becoming a source of profit, and that therefore the authority might be persons who would receive the rent of the land if the same were let at a rack-rent, and so be "owners" within the definition.

With the Tooting Bec Common case, supra, may be usefully contrasted St. Mary, Islington, Vestry v. Cobbett, [1895] 1 Q. B. 369; 58 J. P. 716. The vestry had in pursuance of the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881, s. 5, acquired by assignment of a lease the residue of a term of twenty-six years in the centre portion of a square, used as a pleasure ground by the occupiers of houses in the square. The assignment contained covenants by the vestry that the land should be used for the purposes of a public garden or open space, and, on failure so to use it, to re-assign. It was held that the vestry was the "owner" within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts.

A Divisional Court has held that a pleasure ground owned by an urban district council was not land extra commercium. The land had been bought under the P. H. A., 1875, for a public pleasure ground, and under the covenants in the conveyance the council were bound to keep it open as a recreation and pleasure ground for the use of the public for ever (Herne Bay U. D. C. v. Payne and Wood, [1907] 2 K. B. 130; 71 J. P. 282).

Rent collectors.

Upon a similar definition in a local Act, it was held that an agent employed to collect the rents of property charged with an apportionment of paving expenses was an owner, and liable as such to be called upon to pay, whether he had money of his principal in hand or not, at any time while the sum assessed upon the premises remained unpaid (St. Helen's Corporation v. Kirkham (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 403; 50 J. P. 647). See also Metropolitan Water Board v. Brooks, in note to s. 72 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, post. In Broadbent v. Shepherd (1900), 65 J. P. 70, it was held that a mere rent collector may be served as owner, under s. 94, post, p. 176, with a notice to abate a nuisance, although such nuisance arises from structural defects. And he may be ordered under s. 96, post, p. 182, to abate it even though he has resigned his post after notice to abate (Broadbent v. Shepherd (No. 2), [1901] 2 K. B. 274; 65 J. P. 499). In Cook v. Montague, p. 8, ante, BLACKBURN, J., said: "The object of the legislature seems to have been this, that as the occupier was often poor, and the real owner might be difficult to discover, it was as well to get at the collector of rents, who could always be found out; and hence the person who receives the rack-rent from the occupier is deemed the owner." An agent or rent collector is not, however, an "owner" for the purposes of the Representation of the People Act, 1867, s. 7, which contains no definition of the term (Nokes v. Strong, [1909] 2 K. B. 625; 73 J. P. 417). The above definition of "owner" does not include a receiver appointed by the court (Bacup Corporation v. Smith (1890), 44 Ch. D. 395). See also Hackett v. Smith, [1917] 2 I. R. 508.

Receivers.

Mortgagees and trustees.

A second mortgagee took possession and collected the rents, which he applied in paying his outgoings and interest on the first mortgage; these exhausted all the receipts. It was held that he was liable as "owner" for paving expenses (Tottenham L. B. v. Williamson (1893), 62 L. J. Q. B. 322; 57 J. P. 614). When a mortgagee has taken possession, he is, and the mortgagor is no longer, the "owner" (Maguire v. Leigh-on-Sea U. D. C. (1906), 70 J. P. 479). Trustees in receipt of rents are "owners," though not beneficially interested (In re Barney, Harrison v. Barney, [1894] 3 Ch. 562; and see In re Lever, Cordwell v. Lever, [1897] 1 Ch. 32).

Executors.

In Glossop Corporation v. Cooper (1913), 136 L. T. Jo. 90, a county court judge held that executors (of an executor) succeeding to an unsaleable and unlettable plot of land were not liable as "owners" thereof de bonis propriis for paving expenses under s. 150, post, p. 286. Note to Section 4.

As to the "ownership" of land devised for a long term on trust to pay debts, etc., see Mansell v. Norton (1883), 22 Ch. D. 769.

"Rack-rent"; "full net annual value."

"Rack-rent" means rent which is not less than two-thirds of the full net annual value of the property out of which the rent arises (a); and the full net annual value shall be taken to be the rent at which the property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free from all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge (if any), and deducting therefrom the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses (if any) necessary to maintain the same in a state to command such rent (b):

(a) See the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, s. 109.

(b) This definition is taken from the Parochial Assessments Act, 1836, s. 1, and is what is set out in the column of the rate in the schedule headed rateable value. As to the meaning of the words "free from all usual tenant's rates and taxes," etc., see Ryde on Rating, 4th ed., pp. 208—211, and Hackett v. Long Bennington Overseers (1864), 16 C. B. (N.S.) 38; R. v. Hall Dare (1864), 34 L. J. M. C. 17. In the latter, SHEE, J., explained the words "free from," as being equivalent to "without regard to," or "putting aside." This definition is probably best explained in the words of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, s. 4, which declares that "'gross value' means the annual rent which a tenant might reasonably be expected, taking one year with another, to pay for an hereditament, if the tenant undertook to pay all usual tenant's rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent-charge, if any, and if the landlord undertook to bear the cost of the repairs and insurance, and the other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain the hereditament in a state to command that rent." "'Rateable value' means the gross value after deducting therefrom the probable annual average cost of the repairs, insurance, and other expenses as aforesaid." From this it will be seen that the "net annual value" in the definition is the same as the "rateable value" as defined in the Act of 1869.

"Tenant's rates and taxes" means those which are borne by the occupier as distinguished from the owner of land, and include poor, highway, watering, watching, police, borough, general district rates; but not land tax or property tax, which are landlord's rates or taxes. See Ryde on Rating, 4th ed., pp. 208—211, as to these rates and taxes and the mode of estimating them.

The following recent cases bearing upon this subject might also be referred to: Waddle v. Sunderland Union, [1908] 1 K. B. 642; 72 J. P. 99; Green v. Newport Union; Stead v. Newport Union, [1909] A. C. 35; 73 J. P. 17; White v. South Stoneham Union, [1915] 1 K. B. 103; 79 J. P. 79; Re Sawyer and Withall, [1919] 2 Ch. 333; 35 T. L. R. 611; Port of London Authority v. Orsett Union, [1920] A. C. 273; 84 J. P. 69.

As to evidence that a rent paid is a "rack-rent," see Wareham and Dale, Limited v. Fyffe, p. 9, ante.

"Street."

"Street" (a) includes any highway [not being a turnpike road] (b), and any public bridge (not being a county bridge) (c), and any road lane footway square court alley or passage whether a thoroughfare or not (d):

(a) See as to the word "include," p. 6, note (b), ante.

Meaning differs in different sections:

In Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B. (1883), 8 App. Cas. 798; 48 J. P. 276, Lord SELBORNE said: "An interpretation clause of this kind is not meant to prevent the word receiving its ordinary, popular, and natural sense whenever that would be properly applicable; but to enable the word, as used in the Act, when there is nothing in the context or the subject-matter to the contrary, to be applied to some things to which it would not ordinarily be applicable. I look upon this portion of the interpretation clause as meaning neither more nor less than this: that the provisions contained in the Act as to streets, whether new streets or old streets, shall, unless there be something in the subject-matter and the context to the contrary, be read as applicable to these different things. It is perfectly consistent with that, that they should be read as applicable, and should be applied to those things to which they in their natural sense apply, and which do not require any interpretation clause to bring them in; and in the natural and popular sense of the word street, or the words new street, I should certainly understand a roadway with buildings on each side (it is not necessary to say how far they must or may be continuous or discontinuous); and by new street, a place which before had not that character, but which, by the construction of buildings on each side, or possibly on one side, has acquired it." From this it will appear that the definition in the text does not invariably govern the meaning of the word street throughout the Act, and it is important to distinguish the various meanings which have been assigned to the term in different sections. See also p. 3, ante.

In Taylor v. Oldham Corporation (1876), 4 Ch. D. 395, JESSEL, M.R., held that the word street, as used in s. 16, included private streets and roads; in fact, that the word must be interpreted according to the extended meaning assigned to it by the above definition. This decision was followed with approval in Hill v. Wallasey L. B., [1894] 1 Ch. 133. The same meaning must evidently be given to the word as used in s. 32.

in s. 26:

In s. 26 the word street is used to mean the roadway as distinguished from the roadway with the houses, and it is probably used in the sense assigned to it by the above definition. The same remark applies to ss. 42, 57, 72, and 126.

in s. 149:

It has been expressly decided that street in s. 149 includes a country lane of which the herbage may be let. It is, therefore, used in its extended sense as here defined (Coverdale v. Charlton (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 104; 43 J. P. 268). And see to the same effect, Nutter v. Accrington L. B. (1878), 4 Q. B. D. 375; 43 J. P. 635, decided on the corresponding section of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. In Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B., supra, Lord SELBORNE said: "In s. 149 of this Act, and the sections which follow it, the word street manifestly has the same sense as when we speak of a man going out of his house into the street, or carriages passing along the street. There the public highway, whether footway or carriage-way, is alone intended, and the houses on either side are certainly not included in that case in the street. And I should be inclined myself to say that this would primâ facie be the sense of the word street when it is used in a context which contains no indication of anything more."

in s. 150

Section 150 is the complement of s. 149, and it would seem that the word "street" as therein used has the same meaning. That the word means the roadway as distinguished from the road with the houses is clear, and the dictum of Lord SELBORNE, already quoted, applies to s. 150 as well as to s. 149. The cases have not consistently decided whether the word is used in its natural and ordinary sense of a roadway with houses on both sides, or in the wider meaning assigned to it by the definition. Maude v. Baildon L. B. (1883), 10 Q. B. D. 394; 47 J. P. 644, apparently decided that the word "street" is used in s. 150 in its natural sense as distinguished from its extended meaning. But in Portsmouth Corporation v. Smith (1883), 13 Q. B. D. 184; 48 J. P. 404, the Master of the Rolls questioned that decision, pointing out that it had proceeded upon a mistaken view in R. v. Dayman, infra. And the court decided that the word "street" as used in s. 53 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (which corresponds to s. 150 of this Act), had to be interpreted according to the definition, and, therefore, included a highway which was not a street in the ordinary sense. And in the case of Midland Rail. Co. v. Walton (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 30; 50 J. P. 405, the court assumed that in s. 150 the word "street" was used as here defined But all doubt on the subject is now removed by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Jowett v. Idle L. B. (1888), 57 L. T. 928; 36 W. R. 34; followed in Richards v. Kessick (1888), 57 L. J. M. C. 48; 52 J. P. 756; Fenwick v. Croydon R. S. A., [1891] 2 Q. B. 216; 55 J. P. 470, and Walthamstow U. D. C. v. Sandell (1904), 68 J. P. 509; 2 L. G. R. 835. These cases decide that the word "street," as used in s. 150, means a street as above defined, and not merely a street in the ordinary sense. Where a local Act provided that every new street should be laid out at least thirty-six feet wide, a new road, eighteen feet wide, which had been sanctioned in the expectation that the adjoining owner would widen it to the full width, was held to be a street within the meaning of a section corresponding to s. 150 (West Hartlepool Corporation v. Robinson (1897), 62 J. P. 35; 77 L. T. 387). A path in Epping Forest was held to be a street which, with the consent of the Epping Forest Conservators, might be made up under the Private Street Works Act, 1892 (Woodford U. D. C. v. Henwood (1899), 64 J. P. 148). As to roadways belonging to railway companies, see cases in the note (b) to s. 150, post, p. 288.

A "street" may be formed by adding, and dedicating to the public, a longitudinal strip of land alongside a highway. See Richards v. Kessick, supra; White v. Fulham Vestry (1896), 60 J. P. 327; 74 L. T. 425; Property Exchange, Limited v. Wandsworth Board of Works, [1902] 2 K. B. 61; 66 J. P. 435; Portsmouth Corporation v. Hall (1907), 71 J. P. 299; 97 L. T. 43; reversed on appeal on another point, 71 J. P. 564; 98 L. T. 513).

The word street in s. 156 is used in its ordinary sense, viz., a road with houses on each side. This was so held upon the corresponding words of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, s. 28 (R. v. Fullford (1864), 33 L. J. M. C. 122; 28 J. P. 357). And see Thomas v. Roberts (1878), 43 J. P. 574; and R. v. Platts (1880), 49 L. J. Q. B. 848; 44 J. P. 765, decided with reference to s. 66 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847. But s. 156 has been repealed by 51 & 52 Vict. c. 52, post, and in that Act the word "street" would appear to have the meaning assigned to it by the above definition. See s. 2 of that Act, but see also note (c) under ibid., s. 3.

The word street in s. 157 is used with reference to new streets. The section confers power to make byelaws with respect to the level, width and construction of new streets, and the doubt which has arisen as to whether the expression is to be interpreted according to its ordinary meaning or as above defined has given rise to some confusion. In Baker v. Portsmouth Corporation (1878), 3 Ex. D. 1, 157; 42 J. P. 278, the court were of opinion that the power to make byelaws with respect to the construction of streets included a power to regulate by a byelaw the construction of buildings by the side of a street, e.g., to provide that no such building should be erected until the street had been constructed to the authority's approval; and this view was approved by the House of Lords in Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B. (1883), 8 App. Cas. 798; 48 J. P. 276. It must not be assumed, however, as a result of these cases that the power to make "new street" byelaws is limited to new "streets" in the ordinary and popular sense of that term, i.e., to new "ways" which have, or are intended in the immediate future to have, houses erected by the side or sides thereof; and it has been held that such byelaws apply to anything which is a street within the definition clause in this section and which is proposed to be laid out and constructed for the first time, e.g., a narrow path giving access to cottages at the far end, but not at present intended to have houses built by its side (Att.-Gen. v. Gibb, [1909] 2 Ch. 264; 73 J. P. 343). See also R. v. Goole L. B., [1891] 2 Q. B. 212; 55 J. P. 535, where it was held that the byelaws as to the width of new streets applied to passages proposed to be laid out at the back of rows of new houses.

"Old street" or "new street."

Although it has been held in many cases that an old highway may become for certain purposes a new street by the mere erection of houses on one or both sides of it, whereby it becomes for the first time a street in the ordinary or popular sense (see, for example, Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B. 183; Dryden v. Putney Overseers (1876), 1 Ex. D. 223; 40 J. P. 263; Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B., supra; Att.-Gen. v. Rufford, [1899] 1 Ch. 537; 63 J. P. 232; Clerkenwell Vestry v. Edmondson, [1902] 1 K. B. 336; 66 J. P. 324), yet the mere erection of houses does not amount to the laying out of such old highway as a new street within the meaning of the byelaws, for the laying out of a street involves some physical interference with or something done on the highway itself. Accordingly, it has been held that the mere erection of houses by the side of an old highway does not make it incumbent on the person building such houses to widen the highway to the width prescribed by the byelaws for the laying out of new streets. See Devonport Corporation v. Tozer, [1903] 1 Ch. 759; 67 J. P. 269; Att.-Gen. v. Gibb, supra; Att.-Gen. v. Dorin, [1912] 1 Ch. 369; 76 J. P. 181. These cases remove much of the practical difficulty which had been felt as to the precise point of time at which an old highway became a new street so as to involve an obligation to widen it. Much of the confusion existing on this subject arose from the cases decided under the Metropolis Management Acts, for under those statutes the liability of frontagers to pay paving expenses depends upon whether a way, new or old, has become a new street by the erection of buildings in it to such an extent as to give it for the first time the character of a street in the ordinary sense, and this was of course a question of fact in every case. The following metropolitan cases on this subject may be referred to: R. v. Dayman (1857), 7 E. & B. 672; R. v. Islington Vestry (1858), E. B. & E. 743; R. v. Fullford (1864), 33 L. J. M. C. 122; 28 J. P. 357; Dodd v. St. Pancras Vestry (1869), 34 J. P. 517; North London Rail. Co. v. Islington Vestry (1872), 37 J. P. 341; Islington Vestry v. Barrett (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 278; 38 J. P. 198; Bowles v. Islington Vestry (1875), 39 J. P. 757; R. v. Shiel (1884), 49 J. P. 68; 50 L. T. 590; Wilson v. Camberwell Vestry, [1892] 1 Q. B. 1; 56 J. P. 167; Camberwell Vestry v. Crystal Palace Co., [1892] 2 Q. B. 33; 57 J. P. 5; Davis v. Greenwich Board of Works, [1895] 2 Q. B. 219; 59 J. P. 517; White v. Fulham Vestry (1896), 60 J. P. 327; 74 L. T. 425; Battersea Vestry v. Palmer (1896), 66 L. J. Q. B. 77; 60 J. P. 774; Arter v. Hammersmith Vestry, [1897] 1 Q. B. 646; 61 J. P. 279; Crosse v. Wandsworth Vestry (1898), 62 J. P. 807; 79 L. T. 351; Allen v. Fulham Vestry, [1899] 1 Q. B. 681; 63 J. P. 212; Simmonds v. Fulham Vestry, [1900] 2 Q. B. 188; 64 J. P. 548; Property Exchange, Ltd. v. Wandsworth Board of Works, [1902] 2 K. B. 61; 66 J. P. 435.

In addition to the metropolitan cases above mentioned there are other cases which have arisen outside the metropolis and decide that it is a question of fact whether a place has become a "new street." See, for example, Robinson v. Barton Eccles L. B., supra; Fellowes v. Sedgley U. D. C. (1906), 70 J. P. 412; 4 L. G. R. 970; Greenwood v. Queensbury U. D. C. (1906), 3 Architects L. R. 145; Att.-Gen. v. Dorin, supra. But, of course, the question of fact can only arise after it has been determined in what sense the word "street" has been used in the particular section under consideration. See Eccles v. Wirral R. S. A. (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 107; 50 J. P. 596. And it is to be observed that the court will always inquire whether there has been any evidence to justify the finding of justices on the facts. See Williams v. Powning (1883), 47 J. P. 486; 48 L. T. 672; Midland Rail. Co. v. Watton (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 30; 50 J. P. 405.

In Tarrant v. Woking U. D. C., [1914] 3 K. B. 796; 79 J. P. 22, a street had been constructed in three portions in 1905, in 1910, and 1911 respectively and in conformance with byelaws stipulating the widths of the carriageway and footway. The whole when completed formed one road and terminated at each end in a public highway, and this caused it to be used as a short cut for traffic. To prevent this, in 1913, the owner at the request of the residents erected piers and gates, thus reducing the clear widths in the portion completed in 1905, whereupon the respondents obtained a conviction for infringement of the byelaws regulating widths of carriageway and footway. It was held that the conviction was wrong, that when once the construction of a new street has been completed no offence is committed by a subsequent diminution of the width below the required minimum.

Extent of a street.

Whether a piece of ground by the side of a street forms part of it or not is a question of fact (Bell v. Great Crosby U. D. C. (1913), 77 J. P. 37; Le Neve v. Mile End Old Town Vestry, infra).

"Street" in incorporated enactments.

The word street as used in the statutes incorporated by the P. H. A., 1875, must in general be interpreted with reference to the definition of the term contained in those Acts respectively (per Lord BLACKBURN, in Portsmouth Corporation v. Smith (1885), 10 App. Cas. 364; 49 J. P. 676. And see Curtis v. Embery (1872), L. R. 7 Ex. 369; Maddock v. Wallasey L. B. (1886), 55 L. J. Q. B. 267; 50 J. P. 404; Att.-Gen. v. Rufford, supra). In Maddock v. Wallasey L. B., the definition of a street in the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, was held not to include an open tract of land above mean high water mark which belonged to the owner of enclosed land fronting the shore. It appeared that the inhabitants had been accustomed to pass and repass along this shore, and at high tide had been in the habit of going upon the tract of land in question, but had not crossed in any defined track. The shore itself is not a highway and presumably not a street. See Llandudno U. D. C. v. Woods, [1899] 2 Ch. 705; 63 J. P. 775.

Note to Section 4.

"Street" in metropolitan statutes.

Newman v. Baker (1860), 8 C. B. (N.S.) 200, decided upon the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, may be referred to, but it throws little, if any, light on the construction of the text. Metropolitan Board of Works v. Nathan (1885), 50 J. P. 502; 54 L. T. 423, decided with reference to the same Act, shows that there may be a place with houses on both sides, which is, nevertheless, not laid out as a street within the meaning of that Act. In that case artizans' dwellings had been erected opening into an approach 100 feet long and sixteen feet wide, entered from a public street through a gateway ten feet wide, over which one of the buildings was carried. A roadway had previously existed on the site, with warehouses abutting thereon, and the gateway included the site of a former gateway which had been pulled down and altered to a greater width. The approach did not afford communication with any other public street, and was for the sole use and convenience of the tenants of the dwelling, to the exclusion of the public, no right of way having ever been dedicated to the public. It was held that the approach had not been laid out "as a street for foot traffic only." See also Daw v. London C. C. (1890), 59 L. J. M. C. 112; 54 J. P. 502; London C. C. v. Davis (1895), 64 L. J. M. C. 212; 59 J. P. 583. All these decisions were considered, and Wood v. London C. C. (1895), 64 L. J. M. C. 276; 59 J. P. 615, was overruled, in Armstrong v. London C. C., [1900] 1 Q. B. 416; 64 J. P. 197. In that case the appellant commenced to erect buildings on a piece of land belonging to him. According to the plan the buildings were to consist of blocks of flats erected in a quadrangle form with an ornamental garden in the centre of the quadrangle formed by the blocks. The approach was to be by means of a carriageway running round the garden. Upon each side of the carriageway blocks were to be erected. Each of the blocks was to have a separate entrance from the carriageway. The appellant did not propose to dedicate any public right of way over the land to the use of the public, but intended to erect gates at the entrance to the approach, and to keep a porter there to open the gates when necessary to allow persons going to and from the flats to pass, and the carriageway was to be for the use of the tenants of the flats and of persons visiting them. It was held that the appellant had commenced to lay out or form a street within the meaning of the similar definition in the London Building Act, 1894. The decision in Armstrong v. London C. C., supra, was followed and applied in London C. C. v. Davis (1904), 68 J. P. 520; 91 L. T. 555.

The word street as used in the Metropolis Management Acts is defined in words identical with those in the text. For a case in which the term was interpreted with reference to the definition, see Hampstead Vestry v. Hoopel (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 652; 49 J. P. 741; and see Hampstead Vestry v. Cotton (1886), 12 App. Cas. 1; 51 J. P. 340.

A space of ground from thirty-three to fifty-eight feet wide between the footway and the carriageway, which had always been used by the inhabitants of the houses facing it for placing carriages on and the like, paying a small rent for such user to the owner of the soil, but which had always been used by the public for passage, subject only to the user by the inhabitants of the houses, was held not to be part of a street, having been only partially dedicated to the public (Le Neve v. Mile End Old Town Vestry (1858), 22 J. P. 657; 8 El. & Bl. 1054).

Turnpikes.

(b) The words "not being a turnpike road" were repealed by the S. L. R. A., 1898, turnpikes being obsolete.

Bridges.

(c) See Arnell v. Regent's Canal Co. (1852—1854), 12 C. B. 697; 14 C. B. 564, as to how far a canal bridge was brought within the terms of a local paving Act. When a street passes over a canal by a bridge, the bridge may, for some purposes, be deemed to be a street (per WIGHTMAN, J., in Beaver v. Manchester Corporation (1857), 26 L. J. Q. B. 311). When a street is carried over a railway by means of a bridge, it is only the street, and not the bridge itself, which vests in the local authority under s. 149 (G. E. Rail. Co. v. Hackney District Board of Works (per Lord WATSON) (1883), 8 App. Cas. 687; 48 J. P. 52).

A county bridge is one the duty of repairing which is cast by law on the inhabitants of the county at large. This duty extends to every public bridge erected before 1803, unless it is transferred to some persons or person or corporation by custom, prescription, or tenure of land. See hereon Att.-Gen. v. West Riding C. C. (1903), 67 J. P. 173. Bridges built since 1803 are not repairable by the county unless they have been erected in compliance with 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5, or have been declared to be so repairable pursuant to 41 & 42 Vict. c. 77, s. 21.

Note to Section 4.

Culs-de-sac.

(d) A cul-de-sac may be a street and public highway (Souch v. East London Rail. Co. (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 108; 37 J. P. 644; Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation v. North Eastern Rail. Co., [1916] 1 Ch. 31; 84 L. J. Ch. 905). In a Scotch case, where by a local Act it was forbidden to lay out a new street which would terminate in a cul-de-sac, it was held that a street of sixty feet which was continued by a lane twenty feet wide was not a cul-de-sac (Stevenson v. Lee (1910), S. C. 14). In Att.-Gen. v. Antrobus, [1905] 2 Ch. 188; 69 J. P. 141, FARWELL, J., said that in no case has mere user by the public been held sufficient to constitute a dedication to the public of a cul-de-sac, and this dictum was cited with approval by KEKEWICH, J., in Whitehouse v. Hugh, [1906] 1 Ch. 253; affirmed, [1906] 2 Ch. 283. And see also Vine v. Wenham (1915), 79 J. P. 423, and Att.-Gen. v. Sewell (1919), 83 J. P. 92; 120 L. T. 363, which had reference to an alleged cul-de-sac used as a promenade and formed by the earth filling behind a sea wall erected for the prevention of coast erosion. For further reference to courts which are culs-de-sac, see Att.-Gen. v. Richmond Corporation (1903), 68 J. P. 73; 89 L. T. 700; Att.-Gen. v. Chandos Land and Building Society (1910), 74 J. P. 401; Josselsohn v. Weiler (1911), 75 J. P. 513; London C. C. v. Hughes (1911), 75 J. P. 239; 104 L. T. 685. So also a highway, one end of which has been legally stopped, may still be a highway (R. v. Burney (1875), 39 J. P. 599). But a way ceases to be a public highway when access to it at both ends has become impossible by reason of the legal stopping up of ways leading to it (Bailey v. Jamieson (1876), 1 C. P. D. 329; 40 J. P. 486; G. C. Rail. Co. v. Balby-with-Hexthorpe U. D. C., [1912] 2 Ch. 110; 76 J. P. 205). A ferry might constitute a connecting link between two culs-de-sac so as to convert same into a through highway, see Hammerton v. Dysart (Earl), [1916] 1 A. C. 57; 78 J. P. 297.

Dedication.

A leaseholder cannot dedicate land to the use of the public without the consent of the owner of the fee. Nor can land be dedicated to the use of the public for a term of years (Corsellis v. London C. C., [1907] 1 Ch. 704; 71 J. P. 219). On appeal the consideration of this point did not become material ([1908] 1 Ch. 13; 71 J. P. 561. And see R. v. Wicklow C. C., [1908] 2 I. R., at p. 116). Where user by the public is the only evidence of dedication, knowledge on the part of the owner must be proved, but such knowledge may be inferred from the circumstances of the case (Webb v. Baldwin (1911), 75 J. P. 564). Thus in Folkestone Corporation v. Brockman, [1914], A. C. 338, per Lord ATKINSON: "Proof of long, continuous and uninterrupted user of a way by the public, though it is evidence from which dedication may be inferred, does not create a præsumptio juris in favour of dedication which, unless rebutted, must prevail." See also Vine v. Wenham, supra; Att.-Gen. v. Sewell, supra, and Hull Corporation v. N. E. Rail., supra. See as to dedication where land is in settlement, Farquhar v. Newbury R. D. C., [1909] 1 Ch. 12; 73 J. P. 1. And as to dedication by statutory bodies, such as canal and railway companies, see the cases cited in the notes to s. 148, post, p. 272.

"The Act expressly calls places streets whether they are public property or private property, and whether the public have any rights over them or have no rights over them" (per JESSEL, M.R., in Taylor v. Oldham Corporation (1876), 4 Ch. D., at p. 407). And see Midland Rail. Co. v. Watton, supra; Hill v. Wallasey L. B., cited in notes to s. 57; Armstrong v. London C. C., supra.

"House."

"House" includes schools, also factories and other buildings in which more than twenty persons are employed at one time:

The words in italics were repealed by 41 & 42 Vict. c. 16, s. 107, Sched. 6. How far this term is extended to any house remains for judicial decision. It is not to be read into s. 42 of this Act (post, p. 107), and therefore a steam laundry, although containing a dwelling-house for the manageress and for the clerk in charge, is not a "house" for the purpose of the removal of "house refuse," under that section (per CHARLES, J., in London and Provincial Laundry Co. v. Willesden L. B., [1892] 2 Q. B. 271; 56 J. P. 696).

"House" generally.

There is no definition of a "house" here, but only an extension of the term. Reference, therefore, may be made to the cases upon the parliamentary and municipal franchises, and upon settlement under the Poor Law, for illustration of the word "house." Primâ facie a house means a dwelling-house (Surman v. Darley (1845), 14 M. & W. 181); or a building calculated to be used as such (Nunn v. Denton (1845), 8 Scott N. R. 794; Daniel v. Coulsting, ib. 949); but the above interpretation extends the signification, and it is presumed that the term would signify any building in which persons are employed. It has recently been decided that it is a question of fact whether particular premises are a "house" within s. 62 of this Act. See Wootten v. Bishop (1907), 71 J. P. 334; 96 L. T. 705. In Brighton Aerodrome, Ltd. v. Dell, [1917] 2 K. B. 380, it was held that, under a Sea Defence Order, aeroplane hangars were "houses" within the meaning of the Order. Note to Section 4.

Buildings used as places of business, in which no one slept, and which were originally occupied as dwelling-houses and had been converted into business premises, and which were capable, with slight internal alterations, of being fitted for use as dwelling-houses, were held to be "houses" within the meaning of a local Act (Lewin v. End, [1906] A. C. 299; 70 J. P. 268; see also Lewin v. Newnes (1904), 68 J. P. 164; 90 L. T. 160). Business premises.

A day school where there were no boarders and where none of the members of the staff resided, and in which only two maidservants dwelt, was held to be a house within s. 91 (5) of this Act (Wimbledon U. D. C. v. Hastings (1902), 67 J. P. 45; 87 L. T. 118). Day school.

A church was held not to be a house in Angell v. Paddington Vestry (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 714; 32 J. P. 742. But this case had reference to the section of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, which renders the owner of a house liable for the expenses of paving, etc. A church may be a house within the meaning of a byelaw or order prescribing a building line (per MALINS, V.-C., in Folkestone Corporation v. Woodward (1872), L. R. 15 Eq. 159). A dissenting chapel was held to be a house within the meaning of the Metropolis Management Acts (Caiger v. St. Mary, Islington Vestry (1881), 50 L. J. M. C. 59; 45 J. P. 570). The ground of this decision was that the chapel had not been consecrated, and thus dedicated to permanent and unalterable uses. This decision was followed in Wright v. Ingle (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 379; 50 J. P. 436. There it was held that the word "house" includes every building which is capable of being used as a human habitation. If a building, which is physically capable of being so used, is prevented, either by common law or by statute, from ever being put to such a use, it is exempted from the liability to contribute to the expense of paving a street in the metropolis. Thus, a consecrated church of the Established Church of England, is exempted, because, by reason of its consecration, it becomes, by the common law, for ever incapable of being used as a habitation for man. But a leasehold chapel, vested in trustees, in trust to permit it to be used as a place of religious worship for Wesleyans, is a house, because, by the consent of the landlord, the trustees, and the cestuis que trustent, the trust may at any moment be put an end to. And see the note to the definition of the expression "owner," ante, p. 10. Churches and chapels.

The word "house" under the P. H. A., 1848, was held to apply to a toll-house on a turnpike road (Tunstall Turnpike Roads (Trustees of) v. Lowndes (1856), 20 J. P. 374). Toll-house.

In Hole v. Commissioners of Milton (1867), 31 J. P. 804, it was held that buildings and yards used for purposes of business did not come within the description of "house" (for the purposes of a rate made under a local Improvement Act), unless they were also within the curtilage of the house; but that gardens or orchards, subordinate to the occupation of the house as a residence, and occupied with the house as ancillary thereto, were so included within the word "house." Therefore, a mill which opened into a yard adjoining a house, and which had internal communication with the outbuilding and house, was held to be part of the house and properly included in the rates. Whether "house" includes yard, garden or curtilage.

A publichouse was bounded on one side by a street, and in front by a vacant piece of ground not fenced off from the street, and separated from the house only by a narrow foot pavement also without fence, which was ordinarily used by the public as a thoroughfare, though sometimes closed. The piece of land had been treated as passing to the lessee by every demise of the publichouse since 1802; it was used by customers of the publichouse, and it furnished the only means of approach for vehicles to the front of the house. It was held that the piece of land came within the definition of a curtilage, and was part of the house within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, s. 92 (Marson v. L. C. & D. Rail. Co. (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 101 ; 32 J. P. 565 ; following Lord Robert Grosvenor v. Hampstead Junction Rail. Co. (1857), 1 De G. & J. 446). See also, as to the meaning of the word "curtilage," Asquith v. Griffin (1884), 48 J. P. 724 ; Pilbrow v. St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (Vestry of), [1895] 1 Q. B. 433 ; 59 J. P. 68 ; St. Martin's (Vestry of) v. Bird, [1895] 1 Q. B. 428 ; 60 J. P. 52 ; Harris v. Scurfield (1904), 68 J. P. 516 ; and Brass v. London C. C., [1904] 2 K. B. 336.

In Wright v. Wallasey L. B. (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 783 ; 52 J. P. 4, it was held that the word "house" in s. 10 of the Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847, did not include the curtilage.

In R. v. Warwickshire JJ. (1851), 17 L. T. (o.s.) 183, a coach-house and stables adjoining, and occupied with a dwelling-house, and forming part of the same premises, were held to be part of the "house" within the meaning of a local Paving Act.

"Dwelling-house."

As to what constitutes a "dwelling-house," see Lawson v. Fraser (1881), 8 L. R. Ir. 55, where premises used as a corn store and kiln, part of which had formerly been used as a dwelling-place, and in which the respondent occasionally slept, were held to be a dwelling-house. A public building in the nature of an hotel for poor men (Rowton House) was held not to be a "dwelling-house to be inhabited, or adapted to be inhabited, by persons of the working class" (London C. C. v. Davis (1897), 62 J. P. 68). See also Chester Waterworks Co. v. Chester Union (1908), 72 J. P. 121, where upon the construction of a local Waterworks Act and the Waterworks Clauses Acts, a workhouse was held to be a dwelling-house, and Bristol Guardians v. Bristol Waterworks Co., [1914] A. C. 379 ; 78 J. P. 217, where a similar building was held not to be a "private dwelling-house." The term "dwelling-house" within the meaning of the Housing (Additional Powers) Act, 1919, was considered in Davison v. Birmingham, etc. Society (1921), 90 L. J. K. B. 206 ; 85 J. P. 73.

"Building" generally.

"Building" is a word of wider signification than "house" (see per TURNER, L.J., in Grosvenor v. Hampstead Junction Rail. Co., supra).

Element of permanency.

In Stevens v. Gourlay (1859), 7 C. B. (N.S.) 99, a wooden structure, intended to be used as a shop, of considerable size and likely to last for some time, resting on joists, but having no fastenings or foundations in masonry, and capable of being lifted from the ground, was held to be a building within 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122. In Poplar Board of Works v. Knight (1858), El. B. & E. 408, it was held that a house simply built on the surface of the ground, without any foundations in the ordinary sense, was nevertheless a building within 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 204, which prohibited the erection of buildings over sewers. In Morish v. Harris (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 155, a structure built of stone, having four walls and a door, which was used by the tenant for keeping guano and other manures, which he used on adjoining land, was held to be a building within the Reform Act, 1832, s. 27 ; but the term, as used in that Act, does not include everything which can be called a building ; "it ought to be in some degree adapted both to be used by man, either for residence or for the industry to which the statute relates, and also to have the degree of durability which is included in the idea of building" (per ERLE, C.J., in Powell v. Boraston (1865), 29 J. P. 550 ; 18 C. B. (N.S.) 175). In Watson v. Cotton (1847), 5 C. B. 51, decided with reference to the same Act, a shed described as standing against a wooden paling, but not fastened thereto, and consisting of six posts put into the ground supporting a tarpaulin, which formed the roof, one side being boarded up with boards nailed to the posts, the structure being used to put barrows and posts into, was held to be a building.

Wooden and open buildings.

In R. v. Gregory (1833), 3 L. J. M. C. 25, an open shop roofed in, connecting the shop front with a newly-built house, was held to be a building within the meaning of an Act which prohibited the erection of buildings within a given distance from a roadway.

An erection made of wood, thirty feet long and thirteen feet wide, was brought along the streets on wheels and put at the corner of a new street. It had spouts with a fall-pipe, and a supply of gas, and was used as a butcher's shop :—Held, that it was a new building (Richardson v. Brown (1885), 49 J. P. 661).

A structure may be a new building under this Act, and at the same time a temporary building under P. H. A. (Amendment Act), 1907, s. 27 (4), see post (Andrews v. Wirral R. D. C., [1916] 1 K. B. 863; 80 J. P. 257).

Conservatories.

In Bowes v. Low (1870), L. R. 9 Eq. 636, a vinery attached to a wall was held to be a building. But a conservatory, 15 feet long by 9 feet deep, constructed of wood and glass without any heating apparatus and built against the side of a house, was held not to be a building within the meaning of a byelaw requiring buildings to be erected of stone, brick, etc. (Hibbert v. Acton L. B. (1889), 5 T. L. R. 274). A greenhouse is a building within the meaning of the Prescription Act, 1832 (Clifford v. Holt, [1899] 1 Ch. 698; 63 J. P. 22). See also the cases cited under the Public Health (Building in Streets) Act, 1888, s. 3.

Walls.

Whether a high wall is a building, quære. It was considered by Lord HATHERLEY, in Child v. Douglas (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 739, that a dwarf wall forming a fence was not (see Weston v. Arnold (1873), L. R. 8 Ch. 1084, in reference to a party-wall). A local Act prohibited the erection of all houses "and every other building whatever," within 30 feet of the centre of a road:—Held, by the Court of Session in Scotland (Lord YOUNG, diss.) that this prohibition did not apply to a parapet wall 1 foot in height surrounded by a railing 5 feet 3 inches in height (Partick (Commissioners of) v. Great Western Steam Laundry (1886), 13 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th series) 500). As to whether fence walls of a canal being erected in a public place constituted a public building, see Arnell v. Regent's Canal Co. (1852—1854), 12 C. B. 697; 14 C. B. 564; see also Att.-Gen. and Great Yarmouth Port and Haven Commissioners v. Harrison (1921), 85 J. P. 54; 18 L. G. R. 740, where it was held under a private Act prohibiting buildings or erections within a defined space, that an ordinary timber boundary fence was not an erection under the Act. In Ellis v. Plumstead Board of Works (1893), 57 J. P. 359; 68 L. T. 291, it was held that a wall, 9 inches thick and 7 feet 8 inches high above the level of the ground, and 14 inches thick below that level and 20 feet long, was a building, structure, or erection within s. 75 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, not being merely required as a boundary wall or fence. But the question depends on the height of the wall and the purpose for which it is built. The forecourt of a house in a street had for many years been bounded on the side nearest the street by a dwarf wall between 2 and 3 feet high. The owner pulled down the dwarf wall and built on its site a wall 11 feet high, which was used as a screen to exhibit advertisements, and also to serve as a boundary to the forecourt. It was held that the dwarf wall was not, but that the substituted wall was a "building, structure, or erection" within the meaning of the same section (Lavy v. London C. C., [1895] 2 Q. B. 577; 59 J. P. 630). In Morrison v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, [1915] 1 K. B. 716; 112 L. T. 1044, it was held that substantially built stone walls, 5 to 6 feet high, bounding and dividing up farm lands and serving as shelter to farm stock were not "buildings" or "structures" within the Finance Act, 1909–10.

Platforms.

Movable seating consisting of tiers of platforms capable of accommodating about three thousand persons erected from time to time as required for exhibitions in the Agricultural Hall, was held not to be a "building structure or work" within s. 145 of the London Building Act, 1894 (Venner v. McDonnell, [1897] 1 Q. B. 421; 61 J. P. 181; followed in Handover v. Meeson (1903), 67 J. P. 313).

Hoardings.

The erection of hoardings for advertisements was held to be a breach of a covenant not to erect or make any building or erection on certain demised premises (Pocock v. Gilham (1883), 1 C. & E. 104). But see Foster v. Fraser, [1893] 3 Ch. 158; 57 J. P. 646). In Wood v. Cooper, [1894] 3 Ch. 671, the erection of a substantial trellis-work screen, intended to be permanent, was held to be a breach of a similar covenant. An advertising company surrounded on three of its sides a piece of ground with boarded walls or hoardings raised to a height of from 13 to 19 feet. These hoardings were stayed, fastened and tied together and strengthened on the inner side. The space enclosed was used for the preparation of wood for other hoardings. It was held that the structure was not a new building within the byelaws (Slaughter v. Sunderland Corporation (1891), 60 L. J. M. C. 91; 55 J. P. 519). In Boyce v. Paddington Borough Council, [1903] 1 Ch. 109; 67 J. P. 23, BUCKLEY, J., held that a screen proposed to be put up upon a disused churchyard managed as an open space, for the purpose of preventing an adjoining landowner from acquiring by prescription a right to access of light to windows of his houses overlooking the churchyard, would not be a building within s. 5 of the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act 1881, and s. 3 of the Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884. The Court of Appeal reversed this decision (see [1903] 2 Ch. 557; 68 J. P. 49) on the ground that in erecting the screen the council would be holding and administering the ground otherwise than for the purpose of its enjoyment by the public in an open condition and for no other purpose, as prescribed by s. 5 of the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881. The House of Lords reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal and restored that of BUCKLEY, J. (Paddington Borough Council v. Att.-Gen., [1906] A. C. 1; 70 J. P. 41).

Temporary structures.

Three caravans, a shooting gallery and steam roundabout were held not to be "structures or erections of a movable or temporary character" within 45 Vict. c. 14, s. 13 (Hall v. Smallpiece (1890), 59 L. J. M. C. 97; 54 J. P. 710). So, also, a builder's pay office constructed of wood and roofed with zinc and placed upon iron wheels for the purpose of enabling it to be wheeled about to any place where building operations were being carried on (London C. C. v. Pearce, [1892] 2 Q. B. 109; 56 J. P. 790); and a bungalow constructed of wood and corrugated iron and erected on a piece of land for the purpose only of exhibition and sale and not for occupation (London C. C. v. Humphreys, [1894] 2 Q. B. 755; 58 J. P. 734). Temporary structures, intended for storing workmen's tools, and for the purpose of a brick kiln, were held not to be buildings within the meaning of byelaws of a local board (Fielding v. Rhyl Improvement Commissioners (1878), 3 C. P. D. 272; 42 J. P. 311). So also a wooden weighing machine house open for the use of the public during the summer months erected on an esplanade at the seaside as a shelter for a weighing machine, and containing also a table and two chairs, was held not to be a new building within the meaning of byelaws under s. 157, post, p. 327, and a movable wooden refreshment stall open during the summer months in the same locality was likewise held not to be a new building (Southend-on-Sea Corporation v. Archer; Same v. Romanis (1901), 70 L. J. K. B. 328; 65 J. P. 292; and see Dublin Corporation v. Irish Church Missions, [1901] 2 I. R. 387; Dublin Corporation v. Allen (1904), 38 Ir. L. T. 78). Again, a portable theatre, constructed of wood, and erected for a short period only, where the intention of the proprietor was to move to another locality within a short time, was held not to be a "building" within the meaning of the P. H. A., 1875, s. 157, or of byelaws framed in pursuance of that section (Newell v. Ormskirk U. D. C. (1907), 71 J. P. 119). See also as to "temporary buildings," s. 27 of the P. H. A., 1907, post.

Bay windows.

A covenant in a purchase deed provided that buildings should not be erected beyond a given line of frontage. It was held that bay windows projecting beyond the line, and carried from the foundation up to the roof, were buildings within the meaning of the covenant (Lord Manners v. Johnson (1875), 1 Ch. D. 673).

Subterranean buildings.

The word building is not restricted to erections above the surface of a street. Thus, arches over which a roadway was made, and which were used as storehouses, were held to be buildings within s. 7 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (Thompson v. Sunderland Gas Co. (1877), 2 Ex. D. 429; 42 J. P. 198; and see Schweder v. Worthing Gas Co. (1911), 76 J. P. 3; 105 L. T. 670; Schweder v. Worthing Gas Co. (No. 2), [1913] 1 Ch. 118). So also street boxes for electric lighting purposes and reservoirs have been held to be buildings, structures or works within s. 145 of the London Building Act, 1894 (Whitechapel District Board of Works v. Crow (1901), 65 J. P. 549; 84 L. T. 595; Charing Cross and Strand Electricity Supply Corporation v. Woodthorpe (1903), 67 J. P. 286; 88 L. T. 772; County of London Electric Supply Co., Ltd. v. Perkins (1908), 72 J. P. 133; 98 L. T. 870; Moran v. Marsland, [1909] 1 K. B. 744; 73 J. P. 114).

As to what is a "new building," see the notes to ss. 157, 159, post, pp. 327, 361.

"Addition to" a building.

Where a bedroom had been erected in place of a conservatory, the external wall of the house having been raised for the purpose, and the justices upon a summons for making an "addition to an existing building" without complying with certain byelaws, held that there was no addition to an existing building on the ground that the bedroom occupied no more space than the conservatory did, the court sent back the case to the justices, holding that this fact was not, per se, conclusive (Meadows v. Taylor (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 717; 54 J. P. 757).

"Drain."

"Drain" means any drain of and used for the drainage of one building only, or premises within the same curtilage, and made merely for the purpose of communicating therefrom with a cesspool or other like receptacle for drainage, or with a sewer into which the drainage of two or more buildings or premises occupied by different persons is conveyed : Section 4.

As to the effect of the word " means," see ante, pp. 6, 8.

There may be instances of drains not comprehended within this definition as where there is a direct communication from a house to a river or canal or the sea.

In Coulton v. Ambler (1844), 13 M. & W. 403, a navigable river or cut was held not to be a " public or parish drain " within the meaning of a local drainage Act. The word drain in the Lands Drainage Act, 1847, was held to include an underground drain (Bowes v. Watson (1879), 44 J. P. 364 ; 42 L. T. 27). A dumb well, i.e., one into which waste water flows through a pipe and thence percolates into the soil, was held not to be a " drain or watercourse " within s. 67 of the Highway Act, 1835 (Croft v. Rickmansworth Highway Board (1888), 39 Ch. D. 272). And see Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames U. D. C., [1898] 2 Ch. 515 ; 62 J. P. 520. A pipe, running through a bank which divided the defendant's land from a highway, which from a time beyond living memory had been maintained there by a highway authority, and through which water which accumulated upon the highway flowed on the defendant's land, was held to be a " drain " within the meaning of s. 67 of the Highway Act, 1835, notwithstanding the fact that there was no defined channel into which the water coming through such pipe flowed (Att.-Gen. v. Copeland, [1902] 1 K. B. 690 ; 66 J. P. 420 ; followed in King's County C. C. v. Kennedy [1910] 2 I. R. 544). " Drain " generally.

The effect of this and the next definition is, roughly, that a drain is that which receives the drainage of one house, while a sewer is that which receives the drainage of two or more. But the word used in the text is " building " ; and where a pipe serves two or more houses, it must, therefore, be considered whether the houses do in point of fact constitute more than one building. Thus two semi-detached houses may constitute one building only (Hedley v. Webb, [1901] 2 Ch. 126 ; 65 J. P. 425 ; see, however, Harvie v. South Devon Rail. Co. (1874), 32 L. T. 1), but it is in every case a question of fact whether they are, or are not, one building so as to make the pipe draining them a " drain." The court can lay down no general rule upon the point (Humphery v. Young, [1903] 1 K. B. 44 ; 67 J. P. 34). But in districts where the P. H. A., 1890, is in force when two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with a public sewer by a single private drain, such drain may for certain purposes be treated as a drain and not as a sewer. See s. 19 of that Act, post. See also Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation v. N. E. Rail. Co., [1915] 1 Ch. 456, where under a local Act it was held that a conduit draining from a number of houses was a single private drain under the Act. " One building "

The drainage of the Lowther Arcade (a passage with a gate at each end, arched over by one roof and containing a range of twenty-five houses and shops) was effected by a construction running down the centre of the passage, and receiving the drainage of all these houses and shops. It was held that the construction was not a drain but a sewer, and that the Arcade was not one building nor premises within the same curtilage (St. Martin's-in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Bird (1894), 71 L. T. 432 ; affirmed, [1895] 1 Q. B. 428 ; 60 J. P. 52). Buildings consisting of forty-six sets of apartments divided into two blocks, which were separated by a causeway 20 feet wide, were erected without any plans being submitted to the local authority. The drainage was by means of twelve branch drains running from each set of apartments into a main drain under the causeway, which communicated with a sewer within 100 feet of the blocks. The causeway opened into a public thoroughfare, and access to one of the blocks was obtained from the causeway and to the other only from the thoroughfare. It was held by MATHEW and CHARLES, JJ., that the two blocks of buildings were premises within the same curtilage, and that the main drain was a drain and not a sewer, and repairable by the owner of the buildings (Pilbrow v. Shoreditch Vestry, [1895] 1 Q. B. 33 ; affirmed (RIGBY, L.J., diss.), [1895] 1 Q. B. 433 ; 59 J. P. 68). The decision in St. Martin's-in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Bird, supra, was followed, and the Shoreditch Case distinguished in a Premises " within the same curtilage."

case where the circumstances were as follows: The appellants were the owners of eighteen dwelling-houses, Nos. 7 to 25 in No. 1 Court, Eyre Lane, Sheffield. The said houses were back-to-back houses, and Nos. 7 to 13 thereof formed part of a block, and Nos. 14 to 25 thereof were in one block; the said Nos. 7 to 13 faced the said Nos. 14 to 19, and between them was an open space of ground with a pavement on either side. Nos. 20 to 25 faced the boundary wall on the south-east side of the court, and between them and the said boundary wall was also an open space of ground with a pavement on the side thereof. The main entrance to the court was from a partially enclosed space of ground, to which an entrance was obtained from one of the main thoroughfares, and the court could also be entered by means of two narrow passages made between certain of the houses, Nos. 7 to 13. There were situate in this court two ashpits and thirteen water-closets for the use of the tenants. The slop water from the sink of each house was carried by a separate channel cut in the pavement at right angles to each house into a long channel at the side of the pavement in the court. By means of these channels the drainage was carried into two gullies in the court, and thence into the main sewer outside of the court. The court held that the eighteen dwelling-houses were not premises within the same curtilage (see Harris v. Scurfield (1904), 68 J. P. 516; 91 L. T. 536). In the course of his judgment in the last-mentioned case, ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., said: "There is no definition of a curtilage which would include the case of a number of houses separately occupied by different people, simply because there is a common access and to some extent common accommodation." See also Brass v. London C. C., [1904] 2 K. B. 336; 68 J. P. 365, and cases cited therewith, on p. 22, ante.

"Sewer."

"Sewer" includes sewers and drains of every description, except drains to which the word "drain" interpreted as aforesaid applies, and except drains vested in or under the control of any authority having the management of roads and not being a local authority under this Act.

As to the word "includes," see ante, p. 6.

Excepted highway drains.

As to the words in this definition which except from it certain highway drains, see Williamson v. Durham R. D. C., Rickarby v. New Forest R. D. C., and cases cited therewith, on pp. 30, 31, post.

"Sewers" generally.

"The word 'drain' as used in the Public Health Act evidently means a passage for sewage from a single house only which may afterwards fall into a cesspool or larger sewer. The word 'sewer' comes from the word to 'sew,' i.e., to drain, and has a much more extended signification, embracing works on the largest scale, such as draining the fens of Lincolnshire by means of canals, etc. In the common sense of the term it means a large and generally, though not always, underground passage for fluid and feculent matter from a house or houses to some other locality. But it does not comprise a cesspool for the purpose of retaining the sewage whether as a simple deposit or to be converted into manure or other useful purposes": per KINDERSLEY, V.-C., in Sutton v. Norwich Corporation (1858), 27 L. J. Ch. 739. See further as to cesspools, p. 28, post.

Semble, a "sewer" presupposes an effective outfall.

It would seem that a line of pipes cannot be a sewer for the purposes of this Act if it has no effective outfall, e.g., if it ends in a cesspool with no proper outlet, or a blind ditch, which does not convey away the contents of the pipes, but merely leaves them to soak into the earth around. See Meader v. West Cowes L. B., and cases cited therewith, on p. 28, post.

"Streams" becoming "sewers."

An ancient tidal fleet or haven upon which barges floated at high tide, was held not to be a sewer, although it became offensive and injurious to health by reason of the houses in a town discharging sewage into it (Pentney v. Lynn Commissioners (1865), 12 L. T. 818).

A stream supplied by the drainage, natural and artificial, of cultivated land, and receiving the drainage of two or three houses in its passage to the river into which it flowed, was held not to be a sewer (R. v. Godmanchester L. B. (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 328; 30 J. P. 164). This case may be compared with a later one where the sewage of certain houses drained into a sewer, and, after passing through the sewer was, for a number of years, allowed to fall into an open watercourse which, in its turn, flowed into a brook: it was held that under the circumstances of the case the open watercourse was a sewer (Wheatcroft v. Matlock L. B. (1885), 52 L. T. 356). And a natural watercourse into which for many years a large number of houses had drained, was held to be a sewer in Falconar v. South Shields Corporation (1895), 11 T. L. R. 223. In Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation v. Houseman (1898), 63 J. P. 85, a tidal stream largely polluted by sewage was held to be a sewer: BYRNE, J., said: "I think it is possible to form a sewer without the construction of any artificial work. If, for instance, an old ditch or the bed of a watercourse from which all flow of water has been diverted is utilised for the carriage of sewage matter, such utilisation would be properly described as forming a sewer. I think a sewer may be formed within the meaning of the section either by artificial construction or by the utilisation of natural channels. It is a question of degree, and I should think that none would dispute that, if a body of sewage a hundred times as great as the natural flow of water in a stream were discharged into the channel continuously, a sewer would be formed." In West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Reuben Gaunt & Sons, Ltd. (1903), 67 J. P. 183; 19 T. L. R. 140, the court held that a natural stream, or watercourse, may cease to be a stream, and may become a sewer, into which persons may acquire certain rights of drainage as against the local authority, and that it may do so even although the natural flow of water along its bed has not wholly ceased. But the court further held that the mere fact that for a number of years sewage has been discharged into a watercourse is not of itself sufficient to convert the watercourse into a sewer; nor is the fact that the watercourse has been covered over material, unless it was done by the local authority in order to turn it into a sewer. The court further held that after the year 1861 a local authority could not convert a watercourse into a sewer merely by the illegal act of discharging sewage into it. The last-mentioned case was discussed and Falconar v. South Shields Corporation, supra, distinguished in West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Preston & Sons (1905), 69 J. P. 1; 92 L. T. 24, where the facts were as follows: The defendants sent polluting liquids from their factory into a channel. This channel originally carried water from a well above the factory, but the defendants diverted this water supply above their factory, took it into their mill, and discharged it in a polluted state into the channel close to their factory. The channel ran from the factory past certain cottages; then joining a stream, fell with the stream into a river. Fifty or sixty cottages emptied their sewage into the channel below the factory until 1892, when a sewage scheme was put into operation for the district. Two cottages still discharged slop water into the channel, and two or three small watercourses fell into it below the factory. A county court judge held that the channel was a "stream" within the meaning of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, s. 20, and that the defendants had committed an offence under ibid., s. 4. On appeal the Divisional Court held that a stream within the meaning of the Act may be either a natural or an artificial one; and that the court was not prepared to differ from the conclusion of the county court judge that the channel was a stream, since (apart from the existing watercourses below) pure water would still flow along the course but for the acts of the defendants. In an earlier case a county court judge, in proceedings taken under Part 3 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, found that the brook in question was a stream within the meaning of ibid., s. 20; but he did not expressly find that it was not a "sewer" within the meaning of this Act, and it was objected that his decision was for that reason ambiguous; but the Divisional Court held that the question was in fact raised before the judge, and was in terms decided by him (West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Yorkshire Indigo, Scarlet and Colour Dyers, Limited (1903), 67 J. P. 80). In a Scotch case, it was held that an open stream which flowed through a borough, and was polluted by sewage from outside the borough, but into which no part of the borough sewage was discharged, was not a sewer (Glasgow, Yoker and Clyde Bank Rail. Co. v. Macindoe (1896), 24 R. 160).

A bourne flow or intermittent stream issuing from the chalk, was held not to be a sewer in Pearce v. Croydon R. D. C. (1910), 74 J. P. 431; 8 L. G. R. 909. But the discharge of sewage into the channel of such a stream may convert it into a sewer (Att.-Gen. v. Lewes Corporation, [1911] 2 Ch. 495; 76 J. P. 1). A natural underground watercourse which ran through the lands and grounds of adjoining owners in a culvert or piping constructed by the owners of the several lands, was held not to be a sewer in Shepherd v. Croft, [1911] 1 Ch. 521.

Effluent or overflow pipes.

An iron pipe temporarily laid down to carry away the effluent water from sewage works is a sewer (Tottenham L. B. v. Button (1886), 2 T. L. R. 828); à fortiori a permanent line of pipes for the purpose (Waltham Holy Cross U. D. C. v. Lea Conservancy Board, Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Limited, p. 29, post). Whether an "overflow" sewer is a sewer for all purposes within the meaning of the Act, quære. See Leeds and District Worsted Dyers and Finishers' Association, Limited v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board (1906), 70 J. P. 480.

Point of commencement of a "sewer."

A drain running underneath three houses received the drainage, first of one, and then of the other two houses, which it conveyed into a sewer (Travis v. Uttley, [1894] 1 Q. B. 233; 58 J. P. 85). WILLS, J., said: "It is impossible to say that the part which is used for the drainage of one building is a drain, and the rest a sewer. The drain is a sewer from end to end." But in a subsequent case he recalled this opinion (Beckenham U. D. C. v. Wood (1896), 60 J. P. 490). In that case, it was decided that a pipe or line of pipes receiving the drainage of more than one building, not being premises within the same curtilage, although a sewer from below the point where it receives the drainage of more than one building, is a drain and not a sewer above that point. Where a drain of a house ran through the adjoining premises, and a sink and water gully in the latter drained into the pipe, it was held that the pipe from the point of junction was a sewer (Duncan v. Fulham (Vestry of), Times, February 11th, 1899).

A "sewer" may exist before any drains connected to it.

In Acton L. B. v. Batten (1884), 28 Ch. D. 283; 49 J. P. 357, KAY, J., held that a line of pipes laid in a street for the use of all houses requiring to be connected with it was a sewer, at any rate as soon as two houses had been so connected. In Beckenham U. D. C. v. Wood, supra, CAVE, J., said: "The general rule, as I understand, is that where a drain receives the sewage of two or more houses, it is a sewer. Where it receives the sewage of one house only, it may still remain a drain, though not necessarily, because it may be a sewer, whether it takes the sewage of one house only, or no house at all. A main sewer may be laid down by the local authority in a new street where no houses are built, but where it is intended houses shall be built. Subsequently the buildings may be commenced at the lower end of the street, and when the drains of one house are connected with the main sewer, the connecting pipes will be drains, and not sewers. But the sewer itself will no less continue to be a sewer although it receives only the drainage of that one house, and consequently a sewer without a drain at all will be a sewer." This dictum of CAVE, J., was followed by NEVILLE, J., in Turner v. Handsworth U. D. C., [1909] 1 Ch. 381; 73 J. P. 95. It was there held that where a landowner gives notice of his intention to make a new street with a sewer under it and his plans are passed and carried out, the pipes become a sewer before they are in fact used.

A cesspool not part of a sewer,

A builder drained a number of houses by one common pipe into a cesspool. The cesspool overflowed, and justices made an order on the owner of one of the houses to abate the resulting nuisance. A Divisional Court reversed this decision, holding that the authority must deal with the matter. It was apparently admitted without argument that the line of pipes was a sewer; and the court seem to have held either that, this being so, the owners had no further responsibility for liquid turned into it, or that the cesspool was part of the sewer (Pinnock v. Waterworth (1887), 51 J. P. 248). It had, however, been said in an earlier case that the definition of a sewer does not include a cesspool, reservoir, or deposit bed for collecting sewage for purposes of disposing of it (Sutton v. Norwich (Mayor, etc. of), p. 26, ante). A plaintiff built some houses having a drain leading into a line of six-inch pipes. The line of pipes was intersected by a pit or cesspool, and from thence the pipes passed under the land of a neighbouring owner. The owner cut off the pipes, causing the sewage to flow back and cause a nuisance. The defendants required the plaintiff to abate the nuisance by cleansing the cesspool, and the plaintiff thereupon commenced an action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from causing a nuisance, contending that the cesspool was part of the sewer, and vested in them under s. 13, post, p. 45. It was held that the action could not be maintained, as the cesspool was not part of the sewer (Meader v. West Cowes L. B., [1892] 3 Ch. 18). There are observations in the judgments in this case suggesting that the line of pipes leading to the cesspool was not a sewer, and if the court intended so to decide, the decision cannot be reconciled with Pinnock v. Waterworth, supra. Meader v. West Cowes L. B. was followed, however, in Button v. Tottenham U. D. C. (1898), 62 J. P. 423. In that case, the owner of certain houses constructed a series of cesspools for their drainage on his own land. He then constructed a conduit which conveyed the overflows therefrom to a larger cesspool. He was summoned for constructing the small cesspools so as to have an outlet into a sewer, namely, the conduit and the large cesspool, contrary to local byelaws. It was held that the conduit to the large cesspool did not constitute a sewer. It was again followed in Butt v. Snow (1903), 67 J. P. 454; 89 L. T. 302, and in Pakenham v. Ticehurst R. D. C., p. 31, post, where BUCKLEY, J., said: "A sewer within this Act of Parliament I conceive must be in some form a line of flow by which sewage or water of some kind, such as would be conveyed through a sewer, should be taken from a point to a point and then discharged. It must have a terminus a quo and a terminus ad quem." Cf. also Croft v. Rickmansworth Highway Board, and cases cited therewith, on p. 25, ante. In Waltham Holy Cross U. D. C. v. Lea Conservancy Board (1910), 74 J. P. 253; 103 L. T. 192, where it was held that the local authority were not responsible for the pollution of a stream by the overflow from private sewage works, it was nevertheless held that the line of pipes leading from such works was a sewer; and this decision was followed in Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Ltd. (1911), 75 J. P. 295; 104 L. T. 569. But see Rochford R. D. C. v. Port of London Authority, on p. 69, post.

nor, semble, the pipe running into a cesspool;

A cesspool may, by the construction of a sewer leading out of it, become a mere "catchpit," and so part of the whole sewer. See Pakenham v. Ticehurst R. D. C., supra.

a catchpit may be part of a sewer;

It has been held that a manhole forming a side entrance to a sewer formed part of the sewer, as being necessary to a sewer properly made, and was not a work auxiliary to the use of the sewer (Swanston v. Twickenham L. B. (1879), 11 Ch. D. 838). But it has been held that an engine-house with pump and machinery, erected partly above and partly below the ground, for forcing sewage along a rising main to a common outfall for treatment was not a sewer within the meaning of s. 16, post, p. 55, but a work for the purpose of "receiving or otherwise disposing of sewage" within s. 27 (King's College, Cambridge v. Uxbridge R. D. C., [1901] 2 Ch. 768).

but not a pumping station.

A marsh wall or embankment keeping back the river Thames from inundating the Isle of Dogs at high water and through which sewers pass draining the island at low water, was held to be a "sewer" within the meaning of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 204, which prohibits building over a sewer: per Lord CAMPBELL, C.J., "Sewer, in its common sense, may mean the whole apparatus, and in its specific sense, a drain, as part of the apparatus" (Poplar District Board of Works v. Knight (1858), 22 J. P. 401; El. B. & E. 408).

Marsh wall as part of "a sewer."

It will be noticed that a pipe need not necessarily convey sewage matter in order to constitute it a sewer. It would be none the less a sewer within the Act if it conveyed only rain or surface water. The draining of rain or surface water collected from different premises by different feeders into one main drain would constitute that main drain a sewer within the meaning of the Act (per SMITH, L.J., in Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., [1893] 2 Q. B. 135, 144; 57 J. P. 692). In a later case it was held that a drain was within the definition of a drain although it only carried off rain water from the roof of a house (Holland v. Lazarus (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 285; 61 J. P. 262). The decision in Holland v. Lazarus, supra, was approved by the Court of Appeal in Silles v. Fulham Borough Council, [1903] 1 K. B. 829; 67 J. P. 273, where it was held that a pipe carrying away sewage and rain water from one house, and rain water only from another, and not constructed as a combined operation under the order of a local authority, was a "sewer" and not a "drain." The last-mentioned case was decided upon the definition of "sewer" in the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, but the decision is equally applicable to cases under this Act. The facts were peculiar and should be referred to, for they led CHANNELL, J., to observe upon the case (in Heaver v. Fulham Borough Council, post, p. 32, and Kershaw v. Paine (1914), 78 J. P. 149). The plaintiff was the owner of two adjoining houses (A. and B.). An underground pipe or drain carried sewage from A. into the main sewer. A gutter ran along under the eaves at the back of both houses, by which rain water falling on their roofs was carried into a pipe passing down the wall of house A. This fall pipe discharged by means of a gully into the above-mentioned underground pipe or drain. From house B. only rain water was carried by this drain. This drain was held to be a sewer. CHANNELL, J., assumed that the Court of Appeal on those facts had held the fall pipe to be a sewer, and said that the court never intended to decide that proposition; that all that the court really decided was that the decision in Holland v. Lazarus, supra, was right; and that in Holland v. Lazarus, supra, the only point argued and decided was as to whether a pipe carrying off rain water only, as distinct from sewage in the ordinary meaning of the word, was a drain in the sense that the unauthorised connection of a drain, into which flowed rain water from a fall pipe, with the drain of another house converted the latter into a sewer. Silles v. Fulham Borough Council, supra, was followed in Kershaw v. Paine, supra.

A "sewer" need not convey sewage.

Note to Section 4.

Land and agricultural drains as "sewers."

Where a railway company constructed land drains for the purpose of conveying surface water from lands adjoining the railway, and these land drains were, without the knowledge or consent of the company, used by a sanitary authority to convey sewage from certain houses within the district of such authority, it was held that the drains were sewers, although, by reason of their coming within one of the exceptions in s. 13, post, p. 45, they did not vest in the local authority (L. & N. W. Rail. Co. v. Runcorn R. D. C., [1898] 1 Ch. 561; 62 J. P. 643). A line of pipes laid down by the owner of a field adjoining a highway from a ditch bordering the highway to a disused gravel pit in the field for the purpose of supplying water to the cattle feeding in the field, was held to be a sewer, although by reason of its being made for profit within the meaning of s. 13, post, p. 45, it did not vest in the district council (Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames U. D. C., [1898] 2 Ch. 515; 62 J. P. 520).

A drain was made by the owner of a quarry for the purpose of collecting and carrying off surface water coming on to his land, and preventing it from running over the quarry. By means of the drain the quarry could be more economically and conveniently worked than if the water were allowed to spread over it. It was held that the drain was a sewer, although, being one made for profit within the meaning of s. 13, it did not vest in the district council. It was argued that, if such a drain were a sewer within the meaning of the Act, it would follow that every drain made for agricultural purposes for the drainage of land would also come within the Act, and would vest in and be repairable by the council. But the court said that mere agricultural drains were excluded from the Act as being made "for profit" (Sykes v. Sowerby U. D. C., [1900] 1 Q. B. 584; 64 J. P. 340). See also as to such drains, Phillimore v. Watford R. D. C., on p. 47, post.

Highway drains and gutters as "sewers."

Several houses and a slaughter-house belonging to B. drained into a road drain which ran into a ditch in B.'s field and there caused a nuisance which the local board called upon B. to abate. It was apparently admitted that the road drain was a sewer, and B. contended that the field ditch was a sewer and vested in the board who must cleanse it. The justices refused to make an order, as B. was not the person by whose act or default the nuisance arose, and it was held that they were right (Kirkheaton L. B. v. Beaumont (1888), 52 J. P. 68). Pipes laid for conveying surface water from roads into a natural stream were held to be sewers in Durrant v. Branksome U. D. C., [1897] 2 Ch. 291. And see Dell v. Chesham U. D. C., [1921] 3 K. B. 427; 85 J. P. 186. A drain constructed by the side of a highway to receive the surface water of the highway, which emptied into an open ditch, was held to be a sewer within the meaning of the definition, though it was not a sewer for all purposes so as to entitle the owners of houses adjoining the highway to connect their drains with it (Kinson Pottery Co., Limited v. Poole Corporation, [1899] 2 Q. B. 41; 63 J. P. 580). As to the latter point, see notes to s. 21, post, p. 78. A channel or gutter at the side of a road which drained the surface water from the roadway, and into which rain-water pipes from the roofs and curtilages of adjoining houses drained, was held to be a "sewer" (Wilkinson v. Llandaff and Dinas Powis R. D. C., [1903] 2 Ch. 695; 68 J. P. 1). In Williamson v. Durham R. D. C., [1906] 2 K. B. 65; 70 J. P. 352, it was held that a pipe (originally put in to take surface water from a road), which in 1894 was vested in or under the control of a highway board, and was consequently not then a sewer within the meaning of s. 4, did not upon the passing of the L. G. A., 1894, become a sewer by reason of its becoming vested under s. 25 of that Act in a district council. The report of the case in the L. R. appears to be somewhat imperfect, but on a reference to the report in the Justice of the Peace, it will be seen that the pipe had for many years received sewage and surface water from various premises. The decision in the last-mentioned case was followed by another Divisional Court, and attention was called by PHILLIMORE, J., to the fact that in Wilkinson v. Llandaff and Dinas Powis R. D. C., supra, the point on which the decision in Williamson v. Durham, supra, was decided was not called to the attention of the court (Irving v. Carlisle R. D. C. (1907), 71 J. P. 212). In Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, [1905] 2 K. B. 34; 69 J. P. 242, it was held that a pipe which had been laid down alongside a highway by an adjoining owner for the purpose of carrying away from his premises surface water from the highway, and into which pipe the defendant had for some years discharged the sewage from his house, but which had not been repaired by the plaintiffs or treated by them as a sewer, was not a sewer, although it also took surface water from the highway. See further as to this case, p. 51, post, and Fordom v. Parsons and Molloy v. Gray, there cited.

By the L. G. A., 1888, s. 11 (6), all drains "belonging to" a main road not retained by an urban authority vest in the county council. In 1875 a drain was under the control of a highway board, and did not vest under this Act in the then local authority; in 1888, as a drain belonging to a main road, it became vested in the county council. It was held that it had not become divested and vested in the rural council by the fact of a house drain being connected to it without the knowledge of either council (Rickarby v. New Forest R. D. C. (1910), 74 J. P. 441). Cf. O'Neill v. Waldron (1905), 39 Ir. L. T. 252.

The plaintiffs had a sewer into which no sewage from an adjoining district might be turned without licence. Builders in the defendants' adjoining district drained houses into a sewer, and led such sewer with the defendants' approval into a road drain under the control of the county road authority. This drain discharged into the plaintiff's sewer. It was held that the defendants were responsible for the sewage thus indirectly delivered into the plaintiffs' sewer and an injunction was granted against them (Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners v. South Dublin Guardians, [1899] 1 I. R. 157).

Effect of unlawful construction of an alleged "sewer."

In Bateman v. Poplar District Board (No. 2) (1887), 37 Ch. D. 272, NORTH, J., expressed a doubt whether the unlawful act of a stranger, done without the consent of the owner of a drain, could affect the ownership of the drain or the liability of the local authority by vesting it in them, and thus throwing the responsibility for it upon them. Again, in Meader v. West Cowes L. B., post, it was said that a line of pipes, in order to become a sewer, must have been lawfully laid, and in Hedley v. Webb, [1901] 2 Ch. 126; 65 J. P. 425, COZENS-HARDY, J., expressed an opinion that a man carrying a sewer through a neighbour's land wrongfully, and without his consent, cannot make it a sewer so as to vest in the local authority. In Pakenham v. Ticehurst R. D. C. (1903), 67 J. P. 448; 2 L. G. R. 19, BUCKLEY, J., after referring to Hedley v. Webb as having decided that if by way of trespass a sewer has been laid down on any land without the knowledge of the landowner, it is competent for the landowner, when he finds out, to say: "This was wrongful against me, this is not a sewer at all, because it was put on my land by way of trespass against me, and it must be taken away," proceeded to say: "I conceive that he can say that, both as against the person who laid it and against the local authority. . . . But if, in point of fact, a system of pipes has been laid by one man in the land of another so as to constitute a sewer with the consent of the latter, or if it had been laid without consent, and subsequently he finds out it has been done, and says, 'I do consent; I do not complain of the trespass. I am quite content,' then it seems to me that a sewer will have been constituted, and as such the same will vest in the local authority." Cases decided under the metropolitan provisions as to "combined drains" (see p. 33, post) appear to show that as against the local authority, except where the owner concerned is, or derives title without purchase for value from, the person who originally made the connection, it is not material how a second house may have had its drainage connected with an existing drain, and that so long as the connection lasts, the drain which is common to the two houses is a sewer, whether the connection was made wrongly or surreptitiously or without the knowledge of the local authority. A builder built four houses which he, contrary to the directions of the sanitary authority, caused to be drained into one drain. He subsequently sold the houses to different purchasers. In a proceeding to compel the purchaser of the premises in which the drain, which so received the drainage of the four houses, was situate to repair such drain for the purpose of remedying a nuisance caused by its defective condition, it was held that the purchaser was not estopped by the wrongful act of his predecessor in title from alleging that the drain in question was a sewer, and that the duty of repairing it consequently lay, not on him, but on the sanitary authority (Kershaw v. Taylor, [1895] 2 Q. B. 471; 59 J. P. 726). In the same way, where the connection of more than one house with a drain was made without the consent of the sanitary authority or of the owner of the house to which the drain belonged, it was held that the common drain was a sewer (Florence v. Paddington Vestry (1895), 12 T. L. R. 30; and see Klett v. St. Giles, Camberwell (Vestry of) (1896), 60 J. P. 411). In another case, a drain for the drainage of four houses was constructed under the order of a metropolitan vestry, and became, under the definition of a drain contained in the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, a drain as distinguished from a sewer. A pipe which carried rain water from the roof of a fifth house was, without the sanction of the vestry, connected with this drain. It was held that the rain-water pipe was a drain, and that its unauthorised connection with the drain belonging to the four houses, converted the latter, from the point of junction onwards, into a sewer (Holland v. Lazarus (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 285; 61 J. P. 262). In another case, the owner of a block of houses in the metropolis had laid down a pipe to carry off the drainage from them, and connected the pipe with a sewer belonging to the vestry in a neighbouring street. There was no evidence of any notice having been given to the vestry, or of any order having been made by them, or of their sanction or of the approval of the Metropolitan Board of Works having been obtained. It was held that, although all these requirements were necessary in order to render the original construction of the drain lawful, yet the drain was, in fact, a sewer vested in and repairable by the vestry (St. Matthew, Bethnal Green (Vestry of) v. London School Board, [1898] A. C. 190; 62 J. P. 532). These cases were followed in Geen v. St. Mary, Newington (Vestry of), [1898] 2 Q. B. 1; 62 J. P. 564. With the cases above referred to, may be compared two others. In one an order of a metropolitan vestry had been obtained for draining a group of eleven houses by a combined operation, so that under the Metropolis Management Acts, the drain common to all the houses was a drain as defined by these Acts, and not a sewer. It was subsequently discovered that there had been a deviation in the course of the drain from the plan signed by the surveyor, but there was no evidence that any houses other than those on the plan were drained by the combined operation. It was held that a mere deviation in the course of the drain was not sufficient to convert it into a sewer, and that the vestry was not, therefore, liable for its repair (Greater London Property Co., Ltd. v. Foot, [1899] 1 Q. B. 972; 63 J. P. 420). Cf. Harvey v. Busby (1906), 70 J. P. 301; Harvey v. Jaye (1907), 71 J. P. 473. In the other case a metropolitan vestry had approved a plan for the drainage of a number of houses which did not show details as to the particular drainage of each house, but authorised the drainage of the houses in pairs by a series of combined operations. In a pair of such houses the drainage was carried off by two pipes, laid one under each house; these pipes joined into one pipe before they reached the sewer. The pipe under house A. took the whole of the drainage of A., together with that from a sink in the back part of house B. The connection between the sink in B. and the pipe under A. had been made at the time when the houses and drains were constructed. The trustees of a settlement were owners of both houses; they derived their title, without any purchase for value, from the original owner, by whom the houses and drains were constructed. The court inferred as a fact that the connection of the sink was made by the authority of the surveyor to the vestry, but held that even if it had been made without authority, the plaintiffs, not being purchasers for value, could get no higher rights than the original owner had as against the public, and that they were estopped from saying that the structure was a sewer (Heaver v. Fulham Borough Council, [1904] 2 K. B. 383; 68 J. P. 278). In Wilson's Music, etc. Co. v. Finsbury Borough Council, [1908] 1 K. B. 563; 72 J. P. 37, CHANNELL, J., held that an unauthorised connection cannot make a "drain" a "sewer" as between an individual and an authority if it was wrongfully made by him or by a person through whom he claims otherwise than as a purchaser for value without notice. Semble, in the future, this exception as to purchasers for value without notice may be abrogated (ibid. : and see Rickarby v. New Forest R. D. C., ante, p. 31). See also Kershaw v. Smith & Co., Ltd., infra, as to the right of an authority, on learning that a drain sanctioned as a "combined drain" has been improperly laid, to cause it to be altered so as to conform to the plans and sanction.

Note to Section 4.

Whether "once a sewer always a sewer": effect of disconnection.

A pipe carrying the sewage of two houses into the main sewer was a sewer within the meaning of a similar definition. Subsequently, the owner of one of the houses disconnected his sewage, so that the pipe was thereafter used for the drainage of one building only. It was held that the pipe did not, upon such disconnection taking place, become a drain repairable by the owner of the house still served by it, but remained a sewer vested in and repairable by the vestry (St. Leonard, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Phelan, [1896] 1 Q. B. 533 ; 60 J. P. 244). On a defective line of pipes alongside the boundary wall of premises being examined it was found that at the end of such line there was a hole in the wall, and on the adjoining premises a short drain leading from a buried gully to such hole. The gully, and the court in which it was, had long ago been covered by a mass of concrete. The pipes had been laid more than forty years ago, when the premises had a common owner, and were said to have been disconnected almost at once. A magistrate found that the defective line of pipes had never drained any substantial part of the adjoining premises, and was not a sewer. The court upheld this finding, and the L. C. J. is reported to have said that even if in the remote past the pipes had taken some drainage from the adjoining premises the time which had elapsed would have been sufficient to destroy their legal status as a sewer (Probyn & Co., Ltd. v. Islington Borough Council, Local Gov. Jo., Nov. 27th, 1909). In Kershaw v. Smith & Co., Ltd. (1913), 77 J. P. 297, a line of pipes authorised to be laid as a combined drain was wrongfully laid so as to be a "sewer" ; twenty-eight years later the authority, learning what had been done, caused the line of pipes to be altered so as to conform to the original plan and sanction. It was held to be no longer a "sewer."

Agreement to treat "sewer" as a private drain.

As to the effect of an agreement by an owner to treat what would otherwise become a sewer as a private drain, reference may be made to Butt v. Snow, ante, p. 29.

"Single private drain" under P. H. A., 1890, s. 19.

The P. H. A., 1890, s. 19, post, provides that, where two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with a public sewer by a single private drain, the district council may cause a nuisance in such private drain to be abated at the cost of the owners of such houses, the expression "drain" for the purposes of the section including a drain made for the drainage of more than one building. But it is to be observed that the section does not affect the definition of a sewer except for the limited purposes for which it is applicable. For all other purposes the private drain remains a sewer within the meaning of this Act. See per WRIGHT, J., in R. v. Hastings (Mayor, etc. of), [1897] 1 Q. B. 46 ; 60 J. P. 759 ; and per WARRINGTON, J., in Pemsel and Wilson v. Tucker, [1907] 2 Ch. 191 ; 71 J. P. 547. See also the section itself and the cases decided upon it, post.

"Drain," "sewer" and "combined drain" in metropolis.

The definitions of "drain" and "sewer" in the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 250, are the same as those in the text, with this qualification, that the word "drain" in the metropolis also includes a drain for draining any group or block of houses by a "combined operation" under the order of any vestry or district board. Numerous decisions have been given with reference to this part of the definition. See Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works (1886), 33 Ch. D. 360 ; Appleyard v. Lambeth (Vestry of) (1896), 66 L. J. Q. B. 347 ; 61 J. P. 276 ; Geen v. Newington Vestry, supra ; Bullock v. Reeve (1900), 70 L. J. K. B. 42 ; 65 J. P. 164 ; Stokes v. Haydon (1901), 65 J. P. 756 ; 84 L. T. 531 ; Gorringe v. Mayor, etc. of Shoreditch (1902), 66 J. P. 565 ; 86 L. T. 592 ; Kershaw v. Taylor, [1895] 2 Q. B. 471 ; 59 J. Section 4.

"Slaughter-house."

"Slaughter-house" includes the buildings and places commonly called slaughter-houses and knackers' yards, and any building or place used for slaughtering cattle horses or animals of any description for sale:

A local Act, which closely followed the language of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, s. 19, enacted that "no person shall slaughter any cattle or dress any carcase for sale as human food or food of man in any place within the limits other than a slaughter-house." It was held that to slaughter cattle on the private premises of an inhabitant, unless for sale as human food, was no offence (Elias v. Nightingale (1858), 22 J. P. 131; 8 El. & Bl. 698).

In a Scotch case (Renfrew C. C. v. Anderson (1899), 1 F. (Just. Cas.) 48), it was held that a person did not "use premises as a slaughter-house" merely because he killed two pigs in the garden behind the house of their owner.

"Water company."

"Water company" means any persons or body of persons corporate or unincorporate supplying or who may hereafter supply water for his or their own profit:

These words are substituted for the words waterworks company in the previous Acts. The undertaking of a waterworks company was transferred by statute to a borough. The profits of the waterworks were under a subsequent statute to be transferred to the borough improvement fund, or, at the option of the corporation, to be applied in reducing the price of water to consumers. It was held that the corporation were supplying water for "their own profit" within the meaning of the above definition (Wolverhampton (Corporation of) v. Bilston (Commissioners of), [1891] 1 Ch. 315). The point was not argued on appeal (7 T. L. R. 374).

"Waterworks."

"Waterworks" includes streams springs wells pumps reservoirs cisterns tanks aqueducts cuts sluices mains pipes culverts engines and all machinery lands buildings and things for supplying or used for supplying water, also the stock in trade of any water company:

Water percolating through the ground in no defined or visible channel is not a "stream" (McNab v. Robertson, [1897] A. C. 129; 61 J. P. 468).

As to what constitutes a "main" pipe, see Whittington Gas Co. v. Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, on p. 128, post.

"Bakehouse Regulation Act."

"Bakehouse Regulation Act" means the Bakehouse Regulation Act, 1863 [26 & 27 Vict. c. 40]:

This Act was repealed by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. The latter statute contained provisions which in effect took away the control of bakehouses from local authorities and vested it in the factory inspectors, but it also has now been repealed by the Factory Act, 1901, the provisions of which as to retail bakehouses are enforceable by local authorities. See that Act in App. I., and see also s. 10 and notes thereto, post, p. 41.

"Artizans and Labourers Dwellings Act."

"Artizans and Labourers Dwellings Act" means the Artizans and Labourers Dwellings Act, 1868 [31 & 32 Vict. c. 130]:

This Act, with many other subsequent statutes relating to artizans' dwellings, was repealed and re-enacted, with amendments, by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, post, Vol. II., which itself, so far as it relates to England, has been amended by Acts of 1894, 1900, 1903, 1909, 1914, 1919, and 1921, all of which will be found, post, Vol. II.

"Baths and Wash-houses Acts."

"Baths and Wash-houses Acts" means the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1846 [9 & 10 Vict. c. 74], and the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1847 [10 & 11 Vict. c. 61]:

With these must now be read the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1878, the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1882, the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1896 (which relates only to London), and the Baths and Wash-houses Act, 1899.

"Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Acts."

"Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Acts" means the Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Act, 1851 [14 & 15 Vict. c. 34], the Labouring Classes Dwelling Houses Act, 1866 [29 & 30 Vict. c. 28], and the Labouring Classes Dwelling Houses Act, 1867 [30 & 31 Vict. c. 28]:

These Acts are repealed and re-enacted by the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, post, Vol. II., which itself, so far as relates to England, has been amended by Acts of 1894, 1900, 1903, 1909, 1914, 1919, and 1921, all of which will be found, post, Vol. II.

"Sanitary Acts."

"Sanitary Acts" means all the above-mentioned Acts and the Acts mentioned in Part I. of Schedule V. to this Act.

Schedule V., Part I., post (now repealed by the S. L. R. A., 1893), contains a list of repealed enactments, and has the following note appended to it: "Of the above Acts the following (namely), 'The Public Health Act, 1848,' and 'The Local Government Act, 1858,' and 'The Local Government Act (1858) Amendment Act, 1861,' and 'The Local Government Act Amendment Act, 1863,' are in the Act referred to as 'The Local Government Acts'"; such definition ought obviously to have been inserted in this section.

"The Local Government Acts."

"Sanitary purposes."

"Sanitary purposes" means any object or purposes of the Sanitary Acts:

"And of this Act," seeing that the objects and purposes of the Sanitary Acts are the same as those of this Act.

"Court of quarter sessions."

"Court of quarter sessions" means the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace having jurisdiction over the whole or any part of the district or place in which the matter requiring the cognizance of general or quarter sessions arises:

The Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13, provides that in every Act, whether passed before or after the commencement of that Act, the expression "Court of quarter sessions" shall mean the justices of any county, riding, parts, division, or liberty of a county, or of any county of a city, or county of a town, in general or quarter sessions assembled, and shall include the recorder of a municipal borough having a separate court of quarter sessions. This definition does not, however, supersede the text.

The words "or any part of the matter, as the case may be," which were in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 82, are omitted. Hence, though the district may be situated partly in the jurisdiction of one court of quarter sessions and partly in that of another, it is assumed that the matter in question will arise in one of them only. But if the matter does not arise in one of them only, both courts of quarter sessions would have jurisdiction, and consequently either. The meaning of the definition appears to be that the jurisdiction of a court of quarter sessions over any matter arising within its local limits is not to be affected by the fact that the sanitary district in which it arises is situate in part only within such limits. But it does not give to a court of quarter sessions jurisdiction over a matter not arising within its local limits, merely because the district in which the matter arises extends nto such limits.

"Court of summary jurisdiction."

"Court of summary jurisdiction" means any justice or justices of the peace, stipendiary, or other magistrate or officer, by whatever name called, to whom jurisdiction is given by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, or any Acts therein referred to:

This definition and the next were repealed by the S. L. R. A. (No. 2), 1893. It is practically the same definition as that which was contained in the S. J. A., 1879, s. 50. In R. v. Price (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 300; 44 J. P. 248, it was held that the Summary Jurisdiction Acts regulated the procedure only in cases where justices were sitting and acting judicially as a court of summary jurisdiction, and not in cases where their duties were ministerial only. But by the S. J. A., 1884, s. 7, it was provided that s. 50 of the S. J. A., 1879, should include such justice, justices, or magistrates as therein mentioned, whether acting under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, or any of them, or under any other Act, or by virtue of his or their commission, or, by the common law. And now by the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13, superseding the text, it is provided that in every Act, whether passed before or after the commencement of that Act, the expression "Court of Summary Jurisdiction" shall mean any justice or justices of the peace, or other magistrates by whatever name called, to whom jurisdiction is given by, or who is authorised to act under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, and whether acting under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, or any of them, or under any other Act or by virtue of his commission, or under the common law. In consequence of this definition it has been held that justices sitting to enforce payment of poor rates are now a court of summary jurisdiction and can therefore state a special case (R. v. London (Lord Mayor of) (1887), 52 J. P. 70; 57 L. T. 491; Fourth City Mutual Building Society v. East Ham (Churchwardens of), [1892] 1 Q. B. 661; 56 J. P. 440; cf. Davis v. Woodfield (1900), 64 J. P. 215; 81 L. T. 782); but the point cannot be regarded as definitely settled (Boulter v. Kent JJ., [1897] A. C. 556; 61 J. P. 532; R. v. West Riding JJ. (1898), 14 T. L. R. 199; R. v. Lindsey JJ., [1912] 2 K. B. 413). See also Hagmaier v. Willesden Overseers, [1904] 2 K. B. 316; 68 J. P. 343; Huish v. Liverpool JJ., [1914] 1 K. B. 109; 78 J. P. 45.

"Summary Jurisdiction Acts."

"Summary Jurisdiction Acts" means the Act of the session of the eleventh and twelfth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter forty-three, intituled "An Act to facilitate the performance of the duties of justices of the peace out of sessions within England and Wales with respect to summary convictions and orders," and any Act amending the same.

The Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 13, superseding the text, provides that in every Act, whether passed before or after the commencement of that Act, the expression "Summary Jurisdiction Acts" shall mean the S. J. A., 1848, and the S. J. A., 1879, and any Act, past or future, amending those Acts or either of them. The amending Acts are the S. J. (Process) A., 1881; the S. J. A., 1884; the S. J. A., 1899; the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914, see Fourth Schedule, Extent of Repeals.

Other definitions in text of Act.

ADDITIONAL DEFINITIONS.—In addition to the definitions given in the above section, several others are contained in the Act. PART II.

AUTHORITIES FOR EXECUTION OF ACT.

CONSTITUTION OF DISTRICTS AND AUTHORITIES.

Urban and rural sanitary districts.

5. For the purposes of this Act England, except the metropolis (a), shall (b) consist of districts to be called respectively—

(1) Urban sanitary districts, and

(2) Rural sanitary districts,

(in this Act referred to as urban and rural districts); and such urban and rural districts shall respectively be subject to the jurisdiction of local authorities, called urban sanitary authorities and rural sanitary authorities (in this Act referred to as urban and rural authorities), invested with the powers in this Act mentioned.

This and the following sections must now be read subject to the provisions of the L. G. A., 1894, post, which has effected important changes in the styles and constitution of sanitary authorities and their districts.

"The scheme of the Public Health Act, by s. 5, appears to have been to divide all England into certain districts, in each of which there was to be an authority, either rural or urban; and each of such districts was to be subject thenceforth to the jurisdiction of the local authority established by such Act, which was to be invested with the powers in the Act mentioned" (per WILLS, J., in Lea v. Facey (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 139, 142; 50 J. P. 295).

(b) Although this word imports futurity, that is not the effect of the section, for these districts existed at the date of the Act, and all such districts as then constituted were continued by s. 326, post.

Description of urban districts and urban authorities.

6. Urban districts shall consist of the places in that behalf mentioned in the first column of the table in this section contained, and urban authorities shall be the several bodies specified in the second column of the said table in relation to the said places respectively.

Urban District.	Urban Authority.
Borough (a) constituted such either before or after the passing of this Act.	The Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses acting by the Council (b).
Improvement Act district (c) constituted such before the passing of this Act (d) and having no part of its area situated within a borough or local government district.	The Improvement Commissioners.
Local Government district (e) constituted such either before or after the passing of this Act (f), having no part of its area situated within a borough, and not coincident in area with a borough or Improvement Act district (g).	The Local Board.

Provided that (h)—

(1) Any borough, the whole of which is included in and forms part of a local government district or Improvement Act district, and any Improvement Act district which is included in and forms part of a local government district, and any local government district which is included in and forms part of an Improvement Act district, shall for the purposes of this Act be deemed to be absorbed in the larger district in which it is included, or of which it forms part; and the improvement commissioners or local board, as the case may be, of such larger district, shall be the urban authority therein; and

Section 6.

(2) Where an Improvement Act district is coincident in area with a local government district, the improvement commissioners, and not a local board, shall be the urban authority therein (i); and

(3) Where any part of an Improvement Act district is situated within a borough or local government district, or where any part of a local government district is situated within a borough, the remaining part (k) of such Improvement Act district or of such local government district so partly situated within a borough shall for the purposes of this Act continue subject to the like jurisdiction as it would have been subject to if this Act had not been passed, unless and until the Local Government Board by provisional order otherwise directs (l).

For the purposes of this Act, the boroughs of Oxford, Cambridge, Blandford, Calne, Wenlock, Folkestone, and Newport Isle of Wight, shall not be deemed to be boroughs, and the borough of Cambridge shall be deemed to be an Improvement Act district, and the borough of Oxford to be included in the local government district of Oxford. So much of the borough of Folkestone as is not included within the local government district of Sandgate shall be an urban district, and shall be under the jurisdiction, for the purposes of this Act, of the authority for executing the Folkestone Improvement Act, 1855 (m).

(b) See s. 198, and the notes to that section, post.

(c) In s. 4, ante, p. 4, will be seen the definition of "Improvement Act district" and "improvement commissioners."

(d) These were the words used in 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, s. 4, where of course they referred to the date of that Act. As here used they would have extended the districts to such as were formed in the interval between that Act and the passing of this Act, but in fact none such were created during that period.

(e) See in s. 4, ante, p. 4, the definition of a "local government district."

(f) See note (d) above. As to how a local government district may be constituted after the passing of this Act, see the notes to s. 271, post, and the provisions of the L. G. A., 1888, s. 57, post.

(g) A borough created hereafter will be an urban district.

(h) All these provisions took effect under previous Acts, but since the passing of the L. G. A., 1894, the whole of this proviso may be regarded as spent.

(i) The case of a borough which was included in 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, s. 4, prov. 2, is here omitted.

(k) It will be noticed that this proviso does not make any reference to the part which is within the borough. That became part of the urban sanitary district. See also s. 339, post.

(m) After the operation of the L. G. A., 1888, provisional orders were made under s. 52 of that Act, dealing with all of these boroughs except Folkestone and Newport, whereby the councils became the urban sanitary authorities: see the section and the notes thereto, post. Oxford is now a county borough: see further as to it, s. 342, post. By 39 & 40 Vict. c. lxi. the corporation of Newport were placed on the same footing as sanitary authorities in other boroughs. Part of the borough of Folkestone is still in the district of the Sandgate Urban District Council, but the corporation are the sanitary authority for the remainder of the borough. Note to Section 6.

7. Every local board (a), and any improvement commissioners being an urban authority and not otherwise incorporated, shall continue to be or be a body corporate, designated (in the case of local boards and improvement commissioners being urban sanitary authorities at the time of the passing of this Act), by such name as they then bear (b), and (in the case of local boards constituted after the passing of this Act) by such name (c) as they may with the sanction of the Local Government Board adopt; with a perpetual succession and a common seal, and with power to sue and be sued in such name and to hold lands without any licence in mortmain for the purposes of this Act (d). Incorporation of local boards and improvement commissioners.

The above section is still in force, although local boards and improvement commissioners are called urban district councils (see the L. G. A., 1894, s. 21 (1), post).

(a) It must be remembered that local boards and other local authorities were incorporated by the Sanitary Act, 1866, s. 46. This clause, therefore, incorporated improvement commissioners who became urban sanitary authorities. Rural district councils were incorporated by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 24 (7), post. Incorporation of other sanitary authorities.

(b) Provision is contained in s. 311 for the change of the name of corporation, but that provision is practically superseded by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 55 (3). In the case of new urban district councils the order of the county council under the L. G. A., 1888, s. 57, provides for the name to be borne by the council and district.

It may be right to observe that "a parliamentary corporation is a corporation for the purposes only for which it has been established by Parliament, and has no existence for any other purpose, and that whatsoever is done beyond the scope of such purpose is ultra vires and void" (per POLLOCK, C.B., in National Guarantee Manure Co. v. Donald (1859), 4 H. & N. 8, at p. 16). And see Att.-Gen. v. Hastings Corporation (1902), 67 J. P. 165; 1 L. G. R. 41; Att.-Gen. v. Manchester Corporation, [1906] 1 Ch. 643; 70 J. P. 201; Batson v. London School Board (1903), 67 J. P. 457; 20 T. L. R. 22; Att.-Gen. v. West Gloucestershire Water Co., [1909] 2 Ch. 338; 73 J. P. 453; Dundee Harbour Trustees v. Nicol, [1915] A. C. 550; 112 L. T. 697; Kemp v. Corporation of Glasgow, [1920] A. C. 836; 84 J. P. 225. The doctrine of estoppel does not apply in the case of a corporation where its grant is in contravention of a statutory enactment (Bishop of Bangor v. Parry, [1891] 2 Q. B. 277; Davis v. Leicester Corporation, [1894] 2 Ch. 208; Canterbury Corporation v. Cooper (1908), 72 J. P. 465; 99 L. T. 612). For further information as to the law on the subject the reader is referred to the treatise on the doctrine of ultra vires by Mr. Seward Brice. Corporations and the doctrine of ultra vires.

(c) See note (b), supra.

(d) But for this provision a licence in mortmain would be necessary: see the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888, s. 1, and note, post. It must be noticed that there is no limit to the amount of lands to be held by these incorporated bodies if the land be required for the purposes of the Act. When a licence in mortmain is obtained there is usually such limit. The acquisition of lands for the purpose of the Act is provided for in s. 176, post. Holding of land.

A similar provision as to rural district councils is contained in the L. G. A., 1894, s. 24 (7), post.

By the Bodies Corporate (Joint Tenancy) Act, 1899, post, corporations may now hold property as joint tenants.

Section 8.

Election of local boards.

8. The members of local boards (a) shall be elective, and the number and qualification of members of local boards, the qualification of electors, the mode and expenses of election, and the proceedings incident thereto, the retirement and disqualification of members, the proceedings in case of lapse of a local board, and all other matters relating to the election of members of local boards, shall be governed by the rules contained in Schedule II. to this Act (b).

(a) The statute thus provided only for local boards, i.e., boards elected for L. G. A. districts. And see as to certain local boards, s. 339, post.

(b) The italicised words were repealed by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 89, Sched. II. The matters therein referred to are now provided for by ss. 23 and 48 of that Act and the rules of the L. G. B. framed thereunder, which also extend to elections of urban sanitary authorities for other urban districts, which are not boroughs, i.e., those which were formerly Improvement Act districts. In boroughs the urban sanitary authority being the town council is elected under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882.

Description of rural districts and rural authorities.

9. The area of any union (a) which is not coincident in area with an urban district, nor wholly included in an urban district (in this section called a rural union), with the exception of those portions (if any) of the area which are included in any urban district (b), shall be a rural district, and the guardians of the union shall form the rural authority of such district (c): Provided (d) that—

(1) An ex officio guardian (e) resident in any parish or part of a parish belonging to such union, which parish or part of a parish forms or is situated in an urban district, shall not act or vote in any case in which guardians of such union act or vote as members of the rural authority, unless he is the owner or occupier of property situated in the rural district of a value sufficient to qualify him as an elective guardian for the union:

(2) An elective guardian of any parish belonging to such union, and forming or being wholly included within an urban district, shall not act or vote in any case in which guardians of such union act or vote as members of the rural authority:

(3) Where part of a parish belonging to a rural union forms or is situated in an urban district, the Local Government Board may by order divide such parish into separate wards, and determine the number of guardians to be elected by such wards respectively, in such manner as to provide for the due representation of the part of the parish situated within the rural district; but until such order has been made, the guardian or guardians of such parish may act and vote as members of the rural authority in the same manner as if no part of such parish formed part of or was situated in an urban district.

Where the number of elective guardians who are not by this section disqualified from acting and voting as members of the rural authority (f) is less than five, the Local Government Board may from time to time by order nominate such number of persons as may be necessary to make up that number from owners or occupiers of property situated in the rural district of a value sufficient to qualify them as elective guardians for the union, and the persons so nominated shall be entitled to act and vote as members of the rural authority but not further or otherwise (g). Section 9.

Subject to the provisions of this Act, all statutes, orders, and legal provisions applicable to any board of guardians shall apply to them in their capacity of rural authority under this Act for purposes of this Act ; and it is hereby declared that the rural authority are the same body as the guardians of the union or parish for or within which such authority act (h).

(a) See definition in s. 4, ante, p. 6.

(b) See s. 6, ante, p. 37. Though the greater part of the union might be comprised in urban districts, yet if all were not, that which remains of the union, though practically only the residue, was to be a rural district. See also note (a), ante, p. 6.

(c) These words have not been repealed, but the guardians are no longer the rural authority, which consists of persons elected as rural district councillors. These are guardians for the parishes for which they are elected, and with the guardians for the urban parishes in the union constitute the board of guardians, which is now a body quite distinct from the rural district council: see the L. G. A., 1894, s. 24, post. Guardians and rural district councillors.

(d) These provisoes were repealed by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 89, Sched. II., post.

(e) By the L. G. A., 1894, there are now no ex officio guardians. As to such guardians formerly, see 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 38, amended by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 24.

(f) The words in italics were repealed by the S. L. R. A., 1898.

(g) The italicised words in this clause were repealed by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 89, Sched. II., post.

The provisions of this clause will apply in some cases where by virtue of the L. G. A., 1894, a rural district formerly situate in two countries becomes divided into two districts, and one or both of these have less than five elected councillors: see s. 24 (5) of that Act, post. The M. of H. periodically nominate the required number of persons to serve upon certain rural district councils (e.g., that of South Mimms), and make a practice of selecting persons who are qualified for election as councillors.

(h) This clause was repealed by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 89, Sched. II., post.

10. In addition to the powers, rights, duties, capacities, liabilities and obligations exercisable by or attaching to an urban authority under this Act, every urban authority shall within their district (to the exclusion of any other authority (a) which may have previously exercised or been subject to the same) have exercise and be subject to all the powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations within such district exercisable or attaching by and to the local authority under the Bakehouse Regulation Act (b), and the Artizans and Labourers Dwellings Act (c), or any Acts amending the same. Powers and duties of urban authorities.

Where the Baths and Wash-houses Acts (d) and the Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Acts (e), or any of them, are in force within the district of any urban authority, such authority shall have all powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations in relation to such Acts exercisable by or attaching to the council incorporated commissioners local board improvement commissioners and other commissioners or persons acting in the execution of the said Acts or any of them.

Where the Baths and Wash-houses Acts are not in force within the district of any urban authority, such authority may adopt such Acts ; and where the Labouring Classes Lodging Houses Acts are not in force within the district of any urban authority, such authority may adopt such Acts (c).

Section 10.

Where any local Act other than an Act for the conservancy of any river (e) is in force within the district of an urban authority, conferring on any commissioners trustees or other persons powers for purposes the same as or similar to those of this Act (but not for their own pecuniary benefit), all the powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations of such commissioners trustees or other persons in relation to such purposes shall be transferred and attach to the said urban authority (f).

(a) This section is in terms less extensive than the P. H. A., 1872, s. 7, and only refers to the particular Acts mentioned. The statute in its different parts enables the urban authority to execute the powers thereby confided to them. But the Act of 1872 vested all the powers and liabilities of the sanitary Acts in the urban sanitary authorities, and s. 326 of this Act gives, in substitution for such powers and liabilities now repealed, the powers and liabilities specified in this Act. The last paragraph of this section provides for powers contained in local Acts.

Control of retail bakehouses.

(b) As already stated in the note to s. 4, ante, p. 34, this Act was repealed by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, s. 107. But by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 102, as respects every retail bakehouse, the provisions of Part V., ss. 97—101, of that Act, shall be enforced by the district council of the district in which the retail bakehouse is situate, and not by an inspector; and for the purposes of the section the medical officer of health is to have the same powers of entry, inspection, taking legal proceedings, and otherwise, as an inspector. By the same section, a retail bakehouse is defined to mean any bakehouse or place not being a factory, the bread, biscuits, or confectionery baked in which are sold, not wholesale, but by retail in some shop or place occupied with such bakehouse. But bakehouses which are not retail as defined by the Act are not under the control of local authorities. These remain under the control of the factory inspectors.

Sanitation of factories.

Section 5 of the Act of 1901 provides however, that where it appears to an inspector under that Act that any act, neglect, or default in relation to any drain, water-closet, earth-closet, privy, ashpit, water-supply, nuisance, or other matter in a factory or workshop, is punishable or remediable under the law relating to public health, but not under that Act, he is to give notice thereof to the district council of the district, and the district council are to make inquiry, and take action if they think proper, and to inform the inspector of the proceedings taken. Section 38, post, p. 101, s. 22 of the P. H. A., 1890, and s. 9 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, contain provisions which enable the local authority to compel owners or occupiers of factories and workshops to provide proper privy accommodation. The provisions of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, the effect of which has been here stated, so far as they are material for the present purpose, will be found in App. I., post, Vol. II.

Working class lodging-houses: the Housing Acts.

(c) These Acts are now repealed and replaced by the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, 1890, 1894, 1900, 1903, 1909, 1914, 1919 and 1921, post, Vol. II., the administration of which for the most part falls to the sanitary authorities. The provisions of these Acts as to working class lodging-houses are now in force universally.

Baths and washhouses.

(d) These Acts (9 & 10 Vict. c. 74; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 61; 41 & 42 Vict. c. 14; 45 & 46 Vict. c. 30; 62 & 63 Vict. c. 29) so far as material are set out in App. I., post. 59 & 60 Vict. c. 59, relates only to London.

(e) There is no definition of these words, but they are explained in s. 327 (3), and they occur again in s. 303.

Lighting and paving, etc. trusts.

(f) See s. 322, post, as to a particular case. It may be well to refer to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 50, s. 2, though it was almost wholly superseded by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, s. 7, as interpreted by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 89, s. 3, and now by the above section. It enables trustees under any Act for lighting, paving, etc. any borough to transfer their powers to the borough corporation, and by the interpretation clause "trustees" means "trustees so charged with the execution of a public trust or duty." It was held, however, that a local board were not trustees within the meaning of this definition, and could not transfer their powers to a borough corporation; and that, as the district of the local board and the corporation were not identical (that of the former being more extensive), 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 26, did not justify such a transfer (Swinford v. Keble (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 549; 30 J. P. 533).

Note to Section 10.

The effect of the provision in the text was to reconstitute improvement commissioners as new bodies under this Act, vesting in them as such new bodies the powers given by the local Acts as well as those given by this Act, and such commissioners in subsequently doing any act in the exercise of the powers originally conferred by their local Acts are acting under this Act, and consequently are entitled in respect of such act to any protection or privilege given by this Act to members of local authorities acting under its provisions (Lea v. Facey (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 352; 52 J. P. 756; cf. Douglass v. Rhyl U. D. C., [1913] 2 Ch. 407; 77 J. P. 373).

Powers and duties of rural authorities.

11. In addition to the powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations exercisable by or attaching to a rural authority under this Act, every rural authority shall, within their district (to the exclusion of any other authority which may have previously exercised or been subject to the same) have exercise and be subject to all the powers rights duties capacities liabilities and obligations within such district exercisable by or attaching to the local authority under the Bakehouse Regulation Act, or any Acts amending the same.

Upon the passing of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, this section was practically repealed, for the Bakehouse Regulation Act was repealed by that Act. It has been pointed out, however, in note (b) to s. 10, ante, p. 42, that the control of local authorities over bakehouses has been partially restored. See the note, and see also the provisions of the Factory Acts in App. I., post.

The powers directly conferred upon rural authorities by this Act are in most cases supplemented by orders of the L. G. B. and the M. O. H. under s. 276, declaring specified provisions of the Act which relate to urban districts to be in force in the rural district or part thereof. Similar orders are also issued under s. 5 of the P. H. A. (Amendment) Act, 1890, and s. 4 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892. See also s. 3 of the P. H. A. (Amendment) Act, 1907.

Vesting of property in local authorities.

12. From (a) and after the passing of this Act all such property real and personal, including all interests rights and easements in to and out of property real and personal (including things in action), as belongs to or is vested in, or would but for this Act have belonged to or been vested in the council of any borough, or any improvement commissioners or local board as the urban sanitary authority of any district under the Sanitary Acts, or any board of guardians as the rural sanitary authority of any district under those Acts, shall continue vested or vest in such council, improvement commissioners, or local board, or board of guardians as the local authority of their district under this Act, subject to all debts, liabilities, and obligations affecting the same property.

All debts liabilities and obligations incurred by any authority whose powers rights duties liabilities capacities and obligations are under this Act exercisable by or attached to a local authority may be enforced against the local authority to the same extent and in the same manner

Section 12. as they might have been enforced against the authority which incurred the same (b).

Object of vesting provision.

(a) The words in italics were repealed by the S. L. R. A. (No. 2), 1893. It must be remembered that by virtue of 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, s. 9, the property referred to had been transferred, and such of it as still remains the property of the authorities mentioned, is therefore continued to be vested in them. But that clause only transferred to the sanitary authorities property applicable to the sanitary purposes thereby placed under the management of those authorities. Thus, if a borough included in a local Act district had been absorbed in an Improvement Act district, all the property of the town council did not pass, but only so much as related to the sanitary purposes. So, in the case of a parish which was a sewer authority, all the property of the parish did not pass, but only what belonged to the parish in connection with the sewers. "But for this enactment there would be a doubt as to whether the property which formerly belonged to the improvement commissioners continued to be theirs, or in what capacity it continued to be theirs, and the Act solves that difficulty by saying that henceforth such property shall be held by the body of commissioners as the local authority" : per WILLS, J., in Lea v. Facey (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 143 ; 50 J. P. 295 ; and see the observations of the C. A. in the same case (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 352 ; 52 J. P. 756. Cf. Douglass v. Rhyl U. D. C., ante, p. 43.

Enforcement of liabilities, etc. of predecessors.

(b) The urban or rural authority have the same legal answers to claims that the former authority had, and such others as would be open to them in claims of a like character against themselves, such as the Statute of Limitations.

With regard to the liability of a local board in respect of a decree made against their predecessors, reference may be made to Att.-Gen. v. Corporation of Birmingham, (1880), 15 Ch. D. 423. In that case a perpetual injunction was decreed in 1875 against the corporation as the sanitary authority of B., restraining them from allowing sewage to flow into a river, the injunction being suspended for five years to give the borough an opportunity to execute certain works. At the expiration of that period the plaintiffs desired to enforce the injunction, but in the meantime the B. T. and R. District Drainage Board had succeeded to the rights and liabilities of the corporation in respect of the sewage. It was held that the new board could not then be made parties to the original action. Thereupon an action was commenced against the new board, the plaintiffs claiming a declaration that they were entitled to the same benefit of the decree against the defendants, as if they had been defendants in the former suit. It was held that the new board were not made by this Act subject to any liabilities of their predecessors except those attaching under the Act, and were therefore not bound by a decree against them, and that, there being no allegation of any nuisance committed by the new board, the plaintiffs had no cause of action (Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, Tame, and Rea District Drainage Board (1881), 17 Ch. D. 685 ; 46 J. P. 36).

But where a serious nuisance had admittedly been caused by a rural authority's mode of dealing with sewage, it was held that the dissolution of that authority and the constitution, by order of the L. G. B., of an urban sanitary authority over the district, with the rights, powers, duties, etc., of the old authority, did not absolve the new authority from liability to an injunction for continuing the nuisance without taking any effectual steps to remedy it. Eleven months having elapsed since the constitution of the new authority, the operation of the injunction was suspended for two months only (Taylor v. Friern Barnet L. B., W. N. (1885), p. 7).

PART III.

SANITARY PROVISIONS.

SEWERAGE AND DRAINAGE.

Regulations as to Sewers and Drains (a).

Sewers vested in local authority.

13. All existing and future sewers within the district of a local authority, together with all buildings, works, materials and things belonging thereto (b),

Except—

(1) Sewers made by any person (c) for his own profit (d), or by any company for the profit (d) of the shareholders (e) ; and

(2) Sewers made and used for the purpose of draining, preserving, or improving land under any local or private Act of Parliament, or for the purpose of irrigating land (f) ; and

(3) Sewers under the authority of any commissioners of sewers appointed by the Crown (g), shall vest in (h) and be under the control of such local authority.

Provided that sewers within the district of a local authority which have been or which may hereafter be constructed by or transferred to some other local authority or by or to a sewage board or other authority empowered under any Act of Parliament to construct sewers shall (subject to any agreement to the contrary) vest in and be under the control of the authority who constructed the same, or to whom the same have been transferred (i).

(a) Note in s. 4, ante, pp. 24, 26, the distinction between sewers and drains.

(b) As to these words, see notes on pp. 28, 29, ante ; note (a) to s. 14, p. 49, post ; note (e) to s. 16, p. 57, post, and note (c) to s. 299, post.

(c) This word, according to the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 6, includes a corporation aggregate. It appears also to apply to a corporation sole.

Sewers made "for profit"—ordinary sewers ;

(d) A sewer made by the owner of some of the houses in a street not yet a highway, though made for the purpose of draining his own amongst other houses, is not a sewer made for his own "profit" within the meaning of this section (Acton L. B. v. Batten (1884), 28 Ch. D. 283 ; 49 J. P. 357). This decision was followed in Pinnock v. Waterworth (1887), 51 J. P. 248 ; 3 T. L. R. 563, MATHEW, J., saying : "The builder had constructed a number of houses. He made a drain and a cesspool and connected them with the first house, and as he completed successive houses he continued the drain from one house to the other, carrying the cesspool forward, and, finally, when all the houses had been completed, there was a line of pipes connecting them with the cesspool. In time that cesspool became a nuisance. Now, was the line of pipes and the cesspool something made for the purpose of profit within the meaning of s. 13 ? It could not be said to be so. If such pipes were to be excepted from the Act the operation of the Act would be narrowed down to the smallest possible point." In another case a piece of land was laid out for building ; a street was laid out and a sewer made which drained the houses. A local board was afterwards formed. The sewer was sufficient as long as sewage could be discharged into the Thames ; but, when this was prohibited, it became necessary to construct a new sewer to carry the sewage in a different direction. The local board having made a new sewer sought to charge the frontagers under s. 150. It was held that the original sewer was not made by any person for his own profit, and, therefore, vested in the local board, who were bound to keep it in repair, and make any necessary alteration at the public expense (Bonella v. Twickenham L. B. (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 577; 51 J. P. 580). HUDDLESTON, B., said: "No doubt the sewer was made for the use of the owners of the houses, but the words of the section are, 'for his own profit,' not 'for his own use.' An illustration of how the exception might apply occurs to me. It might refer to the case of a person who was utilising sewage and made a sewer to conduct the sewage to works used for that purpose, or it might apply to a company formed for the purpose of makng manure who might require to conduct the sewage to a particular place in the course of their business. I think the second exception in the same section bears out this view, for it applies to sewers for the purpose of draining, preserving or improving land under local or private Acts, or for irrigating land. This provision throws light on the word 'profit,' and goes to show that it is not the same as use. If the contention is right, no sewers would ever vest in the local board." The decision was affirmed (1887), 20 Q. B. D. 63; 52 J. P. 356). In Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., [1893] 2 Q. B. 135; 57 J. P. 692, the plaintiff was the owner of land on both sides of a stream, and the defendants were owners of land near to and higher up the stream. The defendants erected on their land a row of sixty-nine cottages, and a long intercepting sewer, with which each of the cottage drains was connected, the sewer being connected with the stream so that the drainage from the cottages passed down the drains into the sewer and so into the stream. The drains and sewer were constructed in pursuance of plans sanctioned by the local authority. It was held that the sewer was not made for the profit of the defendants, and was vested in the authority. Per LOPES, L.J.: "A sewer made for profit means, in my opinion, not a sewer made for the mere purpose of drainage, not a sewer made for the mere purpose of discharging matter not in any way to be utilised, but which it was essential to get rid of for sanitary purposes, but a sewer made for the purpose of realising a profit, above and beyond, and independent of any sanitary purpose. Such, for instance, as a sewer made to collect feculent matter with a view of utilising it for manure, or a sewer made for the purpose of carrying away surface or other water and using it for irrigation." Per A. L. SMITH, L.J. (by way of further illustration): "It will be noticed that a sewer need not necessarily convey sewage matter in order to constitute it a sewer. It would be none the less a sewer within the Act of 1875 if it conveyed only rain or surface water. The draining off of rain or surface water, collected from different premises by different feeders into one main drain, would constitute that main drain a sewer within the meaning of the Act. In some manufacturing districts this is done, and the water so collected is passed on and distributed upon payment amongst different receivers. A sewer made for this purpose would, in my opinion, be within the exception." See also Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation v. N. E. Rail. Co., [1916] 1 Ch. 31; 80 J. P. 57. In Minehead L. B. v. Luttrell, [1894] 2 Ch. 178, the defendant, lord of the manor and owner of a large part of the town of M., constructed, in 1878, at his own expense, and with the sanction of the local authority (where necessary), a system of sewerage for draining the town, and he subsequently extended the system to new streets from time to time. Most of the houses in the town were connected with the system, and a voluntary sewage rate, varying in amount from year to year, was received by the defendant from the occupiers. The plaintiff authority claimed that the sewers were vested in them, but it was held that they were made by the defendant for his own profit. See also as to private sewerage systems, Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Ltd., p. 69, post. In Vowles v. Colmer (1895), 64 L. J. Ch. 414, the plaintiffs laid out and developed a building estate, on one side of which there was a roadway, and, at their own expense, constructed a sewer in the roadway on their own side of its middle line. The building plots were disposed of from time to time, generally at fee farm rents; and on entering into agreements with purchasers the plaintiffs required a payment to be made for connecting the drainage system of the premises sold with the sewer. The defendant was the owner of a house on the other side of the roadway, opposite the plaintiffs' estate, and he claimed the right to connect the drains from his house with the sewer without paying the plaintiffs therefor. The plaintiffs sought an injunction, but ROMER, J., dismissed the action on the ground that Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., supra, was not distinguishable without over-refinement. "Profit" is not to be restricted to a direct money payment. Thus, a sewer made not for ordinary drainage purposes, but to enable the land on which it is made to be occupied land and agricultural drains.

Note to Section 13.

Note to Section 13.

more profitably, or to avoid an expenditure which would otherwise have to be incurred in order that the occupation might be equally beneficial, is made for the profit of the owner within the meaning of the section, and does not vest in the authority. This was so held in the case of a line of pipes laid by the owner of a field adjoining a highway from a ditch bordering the highway to a disused gravel pit in the field for the purpose of supplying water to cattle (Croysdale v. Sunbury-on-Thames U. D. C., [1898] 2 Ch. 515; 62 J. P. 520). A drain was made by the owner of a quarry for the purpose of collecting and carrying off surface water coming on to his land and preventing it from running over the quarry. By means of the drain the quarry could be more economically and conveniently worked than if the water were allowed to spread over it. It was held that the drain was a sewer made for his own profit, and did not vest in the authority (Sykes v. Sowerby U. D. C., [1900] 1 Q. B. 584; 64 J. P. 340). This decision was followed in Phillimore v. Watford R. D. C., [1913] 2 Ch. 434; 77 J. P. 453, and in Vare v. Joy (1921), 85 J. P. 29. In the latter case the profit hoped to be realised consisted in the increased value with which owing to the increase in cost of construction the plaintiff would be credited when the sewer was taken over by the local authority. For an earlier decision to the contrary effect, see Russell v. Knight, cited on p. 79, post.

(e) The word proprietors, which existed in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 43, and was somewhat indistinct in its signification, is here omitted.

(f) This purpose is not limited to irrigation under local or private Acts.

Land drainage sewers under special Acts.

A natural stream, fed by natural and artificial drainage of land, belonging to individuals, was cleared out and partially widened and deepened by commissioners acting under a private Inclosure Act, which gave them power to do so at the expense of the proprietors. In its passage to a river it passed through a town and received the drainage of a few houses. It was held that, assuming it to be a sewer, which was very doubtful, it came within this exception, and did not vest in the local board (R. v. Godmanchester L. B. (1866), L. R. 1 Q. B. 328; 30 J. P. 164).

A railway company, whose special Act incorporated the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, constructed land drains for the purpose of conveying surface water from lands adjoining the railway, and these drains were, without the knowledge of the company, used by a rural sanitary authority to convey sewage from certain houses within their district. It was held that the drains were sewers, but that they were within this exception, and did not vest in the authority (L. & N. W. Rail. Co. v. Runcorn R. D. C., [1898] 1 Ch. 561; 62 J. P. 643). A railway company will, therefore, be responsible for cleansing such sewers, so as to abate any nuisance arising in them.

Drainage boards under the Land Drainage Act, 1861, are constituted by Provisional Order; and such an Order when confirmed by Parliament is to be "deemed to be a public general Act of Parliament" (s. 64 (6)). Whether it is nevertheless "local" within this provision, has never apparently been discussed; but reference may be made to R. v. London C. C., [1893] 2 Q. B. 454; 58 J. P. 21.

(g) See further the saving contained in s. 327, post.

"Combined" and "single" private drains.

(h) The case of Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works (1886), 33 Ch. D. 360, and other cases cited on p. 33, ante, were decided with reference to provisions in the Metropolis Management Acts, which have no exact parallel in the P. H. A., 1875. See, however, the provisions of the P. H. A., 1890, s. 19, post. Cases relating to the question whether a wrongful or surreptitious connection of one drain with another prevents the latter vesting in the local authority as a sewer have already been noticed in the note under s. 4, at p. 31, ante.

Vesting and divesting of sewers.

A line of pipes laid in a new street as a "sewer" therefor in accordance with plans approved by the authority, vests in them upon completion, at any rate as soon as it is approved and authorised to be covered in, although no houses have been built to connect with it; and the authority may under s. 16 proceed to link it up by another new sewer to their general system (Turner v. Handsworth U. D. C., [1909] 1 Ch. 381; 73 J. P. 95; and see p. 28, ante).

As to the liability of a local authority for damages arising out of the negligent construction of a sewer vesting in but not constructed by them, see Morris v. Mynyddislwyn U. D. C., [1917] 2 K. B. 309; 81 J. P. 261.

Note to Section 13.

The question whether the provision in the text as to vesting has been rendered inoperative as to a "single private drain" by virtue of the P. H. A., 1890, s. 19, was considered by WARRINGTON, J., who held that the last-mentioned section does not divest from an authority that which under the P. H. A., 1875, is a sewer. See Pemsel and Wilson v. Tucker, [1907] 2 Ch. 191; 71 J. P. 547, and also Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation v. N. E. Rail. Co., ante, p. 46.

It appears, also, that, as a general rule, when once a sewer has vested, it does not become divested (at any rate, so long as it is used for carrying sewage), because all houses but one are disconnected from it: see St. Leonard, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Phelan, ante, p. 33, but see Probyn & Co., Ltd. v. Islington Borough Council, and Kershaw v. Smith & Co., Ltd., ibid., and cf. Rolls v. St. George, Southwark (Vestry of) (1880), 14 Ch. D. 785; 44 J. P. 680.

Effect of the "vesting" provision—

On these words in a private Act, JESSEL, M.R., said: "This is not the case of a mere easement. The barrel of the sewer—that portion of the subsoil—vests in you (the local authority) under the section. . . . It was found under the old law, and it was sometimes held, that the sewer authorities (they were not called sewer authorities in those days) had only an easement, and it was found to be very inconvenient, and consequently in the modern Acts the property in the sewers has been vested in the sewer authorities. That is to say, that instead of allowing the subsoil to remain in the owner of the soil, subject to an easement or right of sewerage or drainage, the absolute property in the sewer (which means not only the brick barrel or whatever it may be forming the sewer, but the whole interior of the sewer—that is, the whole of the space occupied by it) is now vested in the sewer authorities. And if the sewer is a large one, it amounts in substance to the whole of the subsoil, and that is absolutely vested in the corporation" (Taylor v. Oldham Corporation (1876), 4 Ch. D., at p. 411). This statement of the law was approved by WALTON, J., in Ystradyfodwg and Pontypridd Main Sewerage Board v. Bensted, [1906] 1 K. B. 294; 70 J. P. 240, affirmed in House of Lords (see infra); and by WARRINGTON, J., in Pemsel and Wilson v. Tucker, supra. See also as to the meaning of the words vest in, the cases cited upon the same words in the notes to s. 149, post, p. 277.

confers limited rights and liabilities.

In Att.-Gen. v. Dorking Guardians (1882), 20 Ch. D., at p. 604, JESSEL, M.R., said that the vesting of a sewer in a local authority gave them only a modified and limited right of ownership, and did not give them a right to stop up a sewer. But such vesting gives them an interest in land within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 68 (per Lord ESHER, M.R., in Birkenhead (Mayor, etc. of) v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co. (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 578; 50 J. P. 84).

The provision that all existing and future sewers within the district of a local authority, subject to the exceptions therein mentioned, "shall vest in and be under the control of such local authority," is not confined to sewers under public roads (cf. Scott v. Dunoon Magistrates, [1909] S. C. 1093); but it does not make the sewers absolutely theirs so as to render them to all intents and purposes the same as if they were private owners of the sewers. Therefore they are not under all circumstances necessarily liable in respect of nuisances or pollution arising therefrom: see cases in notes to s. 17, post, especially R. v. Staines L. B., and cases cited therewith on p. 69, and Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., and the line of cases following that decision on pp. 67 et seq.; see also Fordom v. Parsons, and succeeding cases on p. 51, post. They can, without joining the Attorney-General, and without alleging special damage, maintain an action for a declaration as to their rights against a person who misuses their sewers, e.g., who discharges noxious matter into a storm-water gully (Harwich Corporation v. Brewster (1901), 17 T. L. R. 274).

Rateability of sewers.

It has now been declared by the House of Lords that sewers, whether over ground or underground, are rateable whenever the occupation of them is "valuable" within the meaning of the authorities upon rating (West Kent Main Sewerage Board v. Dartford Union, [1911] A. C. 171; 75 J. P. 305, where the earlier cases are discussed); for the similar rule in Scotland, see Aberdeen Assessor v. Aberdeen Corporation, [1913] S. C. 712. The general rule deducible from the authorities on rating appears to be that where a public body have a duty to perform which necessitates the occupation of land, their occupation of any particular piece of land for the purpose of performing that duty is "valuable" to them; and, even though they happen to own it, they must be regarded as possible tenants. It would seem that the cost of construction is, as a rule, the only available basis for valuing sewers. Cf. Water of Leith Commissioners v. Midlothian Assessor, [1914] S. C. 664. Note to Section 13.

Section 34 of the Finance Act, 1921, provides :—

(1) Income tax shall not be charged in respect of a sewer vested in a local authority, in the United Kingdom. Income tax on sewers.

Provided that the foregoing exemption shall not extend to any rent payable or other annual payment to be made by the local authority in respect of the sewer.

(2) In this section—

The expression "sewer" means a sewer maintained by a local authority in pursuance of their statutory duties in relation to the public health ;

The expression "local authority" means a public body having power under any enactment relating to the public health to construct and maintain sewers.

Previous to the passing of the above Act, sewers were assessable to Income Tax under Schedule A. of the Income Tax Act, 1842. Sewers vested in the Public and out of which no profits were made were assessable under Schedule A., No. I., of that Act, whilst Schedule A., No. III., applies to properties therein specified when such properties are used as trading concerns for the purpose of earning profits. See, however, Ystradyfodwg and Pontypridd Main Sewerage Board v. Bensted, [1907] A. C. 264 ; 71 J. P. 425, and Inland Revenue v. Edinburgh Magistrates, [1907] S. C. 1233.

(i) This was a new provision, required to meet the action of local authorities in neighbouring districts, under ss. 28 and 285, as well as the case of special private Acts which provide for the sewerage of extensive districts. It will be observed that it applies both to sewers already constructed at the time of the passing of the Act, and to sewers thereafter to be constructed. Sewers vested in other bodies.

14. Any local authority may purchase or otherwise acquire (a) from any person any sewer, or any right of making or of user or other right in or respecting a sewer (with or without any buildings works materials or things belonging thereto), within their district and any person may sell or grant to such authority any such sewer right or property belonging to him ; and any purchase money paid by such authority in pursuance of this section shall be subject to the same trusts (if any) as the sewer right or property sold was subject to. Power to purchase sewers.

But any person who, previously to the purchase of a sewer by such authority, has acquired a right (b) to use such sewer shall be entitled to use the same, or any sewer substituted in lieu thereof, to the same extent as he would or might have done if the purchase had not been made.

(a) These words, which were new in 1875, enable an authority to accept the gift of a sewer, as, for instance, where it was made for private profit but the landowner gives it to the authority. Before purchasing a sewer the authority should assure themselves that it has not already become vested in them under s. 13. In a case in which an authority proposed to purchase sewers and sewage disposal works constructed by private persons, the L. G. B. held that the sewers had already become the property of the authority, and that consequently there was nothing to purchase. With regard to the sewage works, however, the Board did not consider that these were "buildings, works, materials and things belonging" to the sewers, and a loan for their cost was sanctioned. See, however, Minehead L. B. v. Luttrell and other cases, ante, p. 46.

(b) There is no limit to the extent of this right. The P. H. A., 1848, s. 44, applied only where a perpetual right had been acquired.

Section 15.

Maintenance and making of sewers.

15. Every local authority shall keep in repair all sewers belonging to them, and shall cause to be made such sewers as may be necessary for effectually draining their district for the purposes of this Act.

This is a duty upon the local authority. As to the Power of the M. of H. to enforce performance thereof, see s. 299, post.

Effect of the P. H. A., 1890, s. 19.

The duty hereby imposed on an authority to keep in repair the sewers vested in them is not transferred by s. 19 of the P. H. A., 1890, post, even in cases to which that section is applicable. "If it had been intended by that section to repeal the existing liability, the Act would have been differently drawn, and would have contained some express provision, the effect of which would have been to alter the Act of 1875. As the Acts stand, they leave the general liability untouched. Section 19 of the Act of 1890 gives power to make an application under s. 41 of the Act of 1875 in certain cases and entitles the local authority to recover the expenses incurred by them. Section 41 entitles the local authority, on application made to them, to enter the premises, and have the necessary work done; but that right arises only where a written application is made, stating that the drain is a nuisanec or injurious to health": per WRIGHT, J., in R. v. Hastings (Mayor, etc. of), [1897] 1 Q. B. 46; 60 J. P. 759. See also Pemsell and Wilson v. Tucker, ante, p. 48.

To what sewers the duty extends.

From the cases already cited in the notes to s. 4, ante, p. 26, it will be observed that the obligation of the authority to repair sewers, extends to all sewers except such as are not vested in them by reason of their being within the exceptions mentioned in s. 13, ante, p. 45. It extends, therefore, to sewers which have become such by reason of the acts of private persons on private land, and sometimes even to cases in which the drain of one house may have become a sewer by reason of the unauthorised connection thereto of a drain from another house. As to the liability of a local authority to maintain a sewer which is dangerous by its position, see Morris v. Mynyddislwyn U. D. C., ante, p. 47.

Right of access to repair, implied or express.

For the purposes of repair, the authority have an implied right of access, but that right is limited to such access as may be reasonably necessary for enabling the repair to be done. The plaintiffs, in 1843, under a local Act, constructed a sewer on land, part of which had been bought by the defendants, a railway company, but had not then been used for their works. Part of the remainder was subsequently bought by the defendants. No part of the land ever belonged to the plaintiffs. The local Act not only authorised the plaintiffs to make the sewer, but vested it in them, with a duty to repair it, without, however, giving them any express right of access thereto. In 1863 the defendants, under their special Act, constructed an embankment over the sewer, which made less easy, but did not prevent, access to it. The plaintiffs being obliged afterwards to repair, and having incurred extra expense in doing so in consequence of the embankment, claimed compensation from the defendants under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 68, and the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 6, for injuriously affecting their interest in the sewer. It was held by the Court of Appeal that as a right of access to the sewer had not been expressly given by the local Act, but had to be implied, the right of access which ought to be implied was not any particular mode of access, but such only as was reasonably necessary for enabling the repair of the sewer to be done; and that, as such access had not been prevented by the embankment, but only rendered less easy and convenient, the plaintiffs had no right to compensation (Birkenhead (Mayor, etc. of) v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co. (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 572; 50 J. P. 84). See this case distinguished where express right of access was given (Thurrock Grays, etc. Sewerage Board v. Goldsmith, 79 J. P. 17).

See s. 26, infra, which to some extent safeguards an authority's right of access. An owner of land through which a sewer was laid agreed with the authority that he would not build so as to prevent reasonable access to the sewer. His successor in title having built a stable over the sewer, an action was brought to compel the pulling down of the same: DENMAN, J., found as a fact that the building did not substantially interfere with the authority's right of access, and dismissed the action (Sandgate L. B. v. Leney (1883), 25 Ch. D. 183 n.).

Note to Section 15.

How far duty can be shifted to individuals by "nuisance" proceedings.

It was held in Fordom v. Parsons, [1894] 2 Q. B. 780; 58 J. P. 765, sub nom. Wycombe Union v. Parsons, 71 L. T. 428, that where an authority have admittedly not discharged this obligation to repair a sewer, it is not competent for them to exercise the powers conferred by ss. 94 to 96, post, pp. 176 et seq., so as to evade the performance of the obligation, and, in effect, transfer it to those for whose protection the authority exists. The respondent and others from time to time connected their water-closets with a drain, without the knowledge of the authority. This drain had been an open drain taking surface water from a highway and sink-drainage from houses near it, but no water-closet drainage, and in 1863 it was covered up by the authority, the expenses being paid by a special rate. The respondent's water-closets had been connected with the drain for more than twenty years. The authority had made no byelaws or regulations as to the mode in which communications between drains and sewers were to be made, nor had they carried out any system of drainage for their district, cesspools or earth-closets being generally used. The authority having instituted proceedings against the respondent for the abatement of a nuisance at the place where the drain emptied into a ditch, the justices dismissed the complaint, and on appeal their decision was upheld (ibid.). In an earlier Irish case a householder was summoned for causing her water-closet to discharge into a water channel under the main street of N., causing a nuisance. The channel was, from its size and from having a gravel bottom, unsuited to receive fæcal matter, and was only intended for surface water. There was no other sewer in N., but the authority had made arrangements for carting away sewage weekly. There was no nuisance on the defendant's premises; but the channel was in an offensive state, and a justice ordered the defendant to disconnect the water-closet, so as to prevent any discharge from it into the channel. It was held that the justice's order was wrong (Molloy v. Gray (1889), 24 L. R. Ir. 258). DOWSE, J. (dissenting), held that, as the channel was obviously unfit to take sewage, the connection with it was wrongful, and did not justify the defendant's acts. The other two judges apparently considered that, having regard to the lapse of time and other circumstances, the authority could not dispute the legality of the connection. See also Kirkheaton L. B. v. Beaumont and other cases, on p. 30, ante.

But in a later case (Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, [1905] 2 K. B. 34; 69 J. P. 242), a Divisional Court held that even if the drain there in question into which the defendant had discharged sewage (thus causing a nuisance at a fracture in the drain) had been a sewer, the defendant ought nevertheless to have ceased sending down sewage because this was the real cause of the nuisance, and was therefore responsible as the person by whose act the nuisance arose, and that he could afterwards have taken proceedings against the local authority to have the question of liability to repair decided. According to the report in the L. R. (not, however, the J. P., where the judgment is more fully reported), KENNEDY, J. (speaking with regard to proceedings for a penalty under s. 95), went further and said: "If in such proceedings the local authority bonâ fide dispute their obligation to repair, the justices cannot inquire into the question upon whom the obligation lies, and, if satisfied that but for the defendants' discharge of sewage into the pipe the nuisance would not have arisen, are bound, I think, to deal with him as the person by whose act the nuisance was caused." It is perhaps more than doubtful whether this statement of the law is correct, for the existence of an obligation on the part of a defendant involves a finding that a particular line of pipes is a drain in such a condition as to be a nuisance (see s. 91) and such a finding involves a determination whether the line of pipes is in fact a drain or a sewer. It is submitted that the decision in Fordom v. Parsons, supra, still holds good where it is proved, or must be inferred, that a connection has been lawfully made in accordance with s. 21, post, p. 78.

Duty in case of new building estate.

This section does not require an authority to provide sewers in anticipation of the future requirements of their district, or to enable a landowner to develop his land for building purposes. When building estate is laid out, the owners may have to provide temporary means of disposing of the sewage and drainage. But when houses are actually built to such an extent as to necessitate a scheme of drainage, the duty imposed by the section will arise, and the authority will have to cause the necessary sewers to be made. So far as the new streets on the estate are concerned, that duty may be fulfilled by causing them to be sewered at the expense of the frontagers under s. 150, but the outfall to receive the sewage from such street sewers must be provided by the authority (R. v. Tynemouth R. D. C., [1896] 2 Q. B. 451; 60 J. P. 804). And see Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole (Mayor, etc. of), [1899] 2 Q. B. 41, 49; 63 J. P. 580. In the case of rural authorities, however, the L. G. B. hold that under ordinary circumstances all necessary sewers, whether in public or private streets, should be provided at the cost of the contributory place, and they consequently withhold from the rural authority such of the powers of s. 150 or similar enactments as enable an urban authority to enforce the sewering of private streets at the cost of frontagers. The Board have recently made some exceptions to their rule in the case of parishes which have an urban character, and already possess a main drainage scheme.

Obligations as to trade effluents:

Doubt has existed as to whether the above section imposes upon a local authority the duty of providing sewers of sufficient capacity to receive trade effluents.

The effect of an opinion given by the law officers to the L. G. B. (see the Third Report of the Royal Commission on Sewage Disposal, at p. xi) is that a local authority are not generally bound under the P. H. A., 1875, to provide such sewers as may be necessary to carry off all the trade effluents and liquid refuse coming from manufactories in their district, and that their obligations in this respect are defined by the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, s. 7, and are subject to the limitations stated in that section, and, further, that the obligation under the Act of 1875 of providing sewers is confined to the ordinary requirements of the district, that is to say, that authorities are only bound to provide for sewage in the ordinary sense of the term, including foul water produced in the ordinary course of domestic management, and surface water.

In Peebles v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., [1897] 1 Q. B. 384; 61 J. P. 166, CHARLES, J., decided that the duty of a local authority under s. 15, supra, extended to the making of sewers sufficient to carry off not merely the ordinary sewage, but also the effluents from manufactories in the district, provided they were not injurious to health. The case was taken to the Court of Appeal ([1897] 1 Q. B. D. 625; 61 J. P. 308), and subsequently to the House of Lords (sub nom. Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., [1898] A. C. 387; 62 J. P. 628), being there decided on another ground, viz., that the duty of an authority under s. 15 to provide sewers is only enforceable by complaint to the L. G. B. under s. 299. On the other hand, certain observations made by Lord HALSBURY therein at [1898] A. C. 396, support the opinion of the law officers. It appeared on the pleadings, or at all events was a necessary inference from them, that when the plaintiff's factory was put up in the respondents' district the sewage system was enough for ordinary purposes, and their counsel argued that in such a case the factory owner could not compel the respondents to remodel their whole drainage in order that it might carry away the factory refuse. Lord HALSBURY, referring to such argument, said: "I confess, however, that I am wholly unable to see the answer to the argument at present, if the facts are what the pleadings appear to admit them to be, because, instead of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act having, as Mr. COZENS-HARDY ingeniously argued, reference to a different subject-matter, this appears to me to be the very subject-matter that the Legislature was dealing with there. The preamble of that Act recites that it is expedient to make 'provision for the prevention of the pollution of rivers,' and, having that object before it, the Legislature has obviously intended to look at the system by which the public health is preserved in respect of sewers and drains. What does it there provide? It provides that there shall be an outlet in some form or other for what I may call manufactory refuse; but, contemplating the case which might readily arise where some manufacturer would be very glad to throw upon the rates the necessity of getting rid of his own refuse, it provides also, with reference to that obligation to get rid of the refuse, that where the drainage system of a district is 'only sufficient for the requirements of their district,' there shall not be an obligation to get rid of the refuse of a manufacturer who ought to get rid of the refuse which he is himself creating. That seems to me to be a very intelligible provision, and a very just one; otherwise a manufacturer might come to some very small district, might establish a large manufactory there which would involve, with reference to the law of nuisance, the necessity of getting rid of the refuse created by that manufactory, and there would be no individual obligation upon the person creating it. But if this section in the Public Health Act could be applied in the way it is sought to apply it here, nothing could be easier than for a manufacturer to establish a manufactory for his own profit and throw upon the rates, paid by all the inhabitants, who have no concern with the manufactory at all, the necessity for providing for that great source of expense to the manufacturer of getting rid of his own refuse. It seems to me, therefore, that the Legislature very wisely and prudently provided against such a condition of things as that; and if that condition of things exists here as a fact, as upon the pleadings I think it is admitted that it does, I see no answer to the argument that the section in question would not entitle anybody to call upon the particular district to provide for the extra amount of refuse created by the manufacturer." The same view is supported by the judgments in Brook, Ltd. v. Meltham U. D. C., [1908] 2 K. B. 780; 72 J. P. 409. See also Butterworth and Roberts v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board, [1909] A. C. 45; 73 J. P. 89, per Lord MACNAGHTEN.

Probably no general obligation;

The L. G. B. have acted on the view of the law officers. In their Annual Report for 1898–9, at p. cxx, with reference to a complaint by a firm of mill-owners that a rural district council were in default in providing sewers, they say: "We caused a local inquiry to be held by one of our inspectors with regard to the complaint, and we found that the sewers, though large enough for the conveyance of ordinary domestic sewage, were not of sufficient capacity for the reception of trade refuse. We took the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the case, and they advised that the district council, under the circumstances, had not made default within the meaning of the Act." In the third Report (1903) of the Royal Commission on Sewage Disposal the commissioners (p. xvii) recommend "that the law should be altered so as to make it the duty of the local authority to provide such sewers as are necessary to carry trade effluents as well as domestic sewage, and that the manufacturer shall be given the right, subject to the observance of certain safeguards, to discharge trade effluents into the sewers of the local authority if he wishes to do so."

As to the right to discharge "trade effluents" into existing sewers, see the notes to s. 21, at p. 78, post.

Obligation as to alkali works.

Additional legislation exists as to certain classes of manufacturers, viz., owners of alkali works. By s. 3 (3) of the Alkali, etc. Works Regulation Act, 1906: "On the request of the owner of any such work as is mentioned in this section the sanitary authority of the district in which such work is situate shall, at the expense of such owner, provide and maintain a drain or channel for carrying off such liquid as aforesaid produced in such work into the sea or into any river or watercourse into which the liquid can be carried without contravention of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, as amended by any subsequent enactment; and the sanitary authority shall for the purpose of providing any such drain or channel have the like powers as they have for providing sewers, whether within or without their district, under the Public Health Act. (4) Compensation shall be made to any person for any damage sustained by him by reason of the exercise by a sanitary authority of the powers conferred by this section, and such compensation shall be deemed part of the expenses to be paid by the owner making the request to the sanitary authority under this section."

Remedy for neglect of duty:

It was formerly considered that the duty to construct and repair sewers could be enforced by mandamus. Cf. In re Maidenhead L. B. (1855), 26 L. T. (o.s.) 104; Ex parte Parsons (1858), 22 J. P. 68; R. v. Epsom Union (Guardians of) (1863), 8 L. T. 383; R. v. Tottenham L. B. (1893), 9 T. L. R. 414. It is now, however, established that "a default" in providing sufficient sewers or in the maintenance of existing sewers (see s. 299, post), can be met only by the complaint to L. G. B.

Note to Section 15.

no mandamus, as a rule, no action.

special remedy given by that section, i.e., an appeal to the M. of H. Thus, a mandamus will not be granted to compel an authority to provide sufficient sewers (Pasmore v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., p. 52, ante; see also Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation, [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 69 J. P. 62, and Brown v. Dunstable Corporation, p. 68, post), nor will an action for damages lie in respect of mere failure to do so (Robinson v. Workington (Mayor, etc. of), infra). It is not, however, easy to say precisely what grounds of complaint as to the management of existing sewers are covered by the word "maintenance" in s. 299, and what grounds will, in spite of that section, support an action; upon this point the decisions appear to be somewhat conflicting. In Stretton's Derby Brewery Co. v. Mayor, etc. of Derby, p. 76, post, the plaintiffs' complaint was that a sewer originally of sufficient size had become insufficient owing to many new houses being connected with it, and that in wet weather it consequently became surcharged, with the result that sewage was forced back along the plaintiffs' drains and into their cellars. No argument was based on s. 299, but the plaintiffs failed, because under the special circumstances the defendants—who were bonâ fide considering a new sewerage system—were held to have been guilty of no negligence or want of reasonable care and diligence. It appears, however, to have been admitted that an authority who allow a sewer to be regularly surcharged do not "keep it" so as not to be a nuisance within the meaning of s. 19, post, and would therefore be liable in damages if there was negligence. In the next case a sewer had been sufficient for the district in which the plaintiff's houses were situated, until a number of new houses were built and drained into it. The sewer thereby became inadequate to carry off all the sewage, and some of it was bayed back and overflowed into the plaintiff's houses, causing damage. It was held that the plaintiff had no right of action to recover damages, the essence of his complaint being that the defendants had failed to provide sufficient sewers, which was an act of nonfeasance only and one for which s. 299 provided a remedy. It was also apparently held that the words "keep so as not to be a nuisance" in s. 19 had no application to the facts (Robinson v. Workington (Mayor, etc. of), [1897] 1 Q. B. 619; 61 J. P. 164). It has been held, however, that the diversion, by an authority in the execution of their statutory powers, of sewage from one drain or sewer into another already overcharged with sewage, whereby damage is occasioned to an occupier of premises, is not a mere act of omission in the performance of duties imposed by this section, and, therefore, only a subject for compensation under s. 308, but is the commission of a legal wrong in respect of which the occupier can maintain an action (Dent v. Bournemouth (Mayor, etc. of) (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 395). In connection with the foregoing decisions a colonial case may be noticed. A local authority converted part of a watercourse into a sewer and subsequently a number of subsidiary channels were made by them or by their leave for carrying water and sewage into this sewer. After heavy rains the sewer became choked, and overflowed, covering certain low-lying lands with sewage and slime. It was held that the authority had been guilty of negligence, and were liable in damages, it being no defence to say that before any work was done to the watercourse, the land in question was sometimes flooded with storm water from it, or that the work originally done was sufficient at that time, since now that additional channels had been constructed it was clearly insufficient, flooding having occurred on previous occasions. Per Lord MACNAGHTEN: "As for negligence, it is difficult to imagine a more conspicuous example of negligence than is shown by repeatedly pouring offensive stuff into a receptacle or channel proved over and over again to be insufficient to hold and pass it on. They might just as well pour this stuff directly on the plaintiff's land" (Hawthorn Corporation v. Kannuluik, [1906] A. C. 105). See also a somewhat similar Scotch case, Hanley v. Edinburgh Corporation, [1912] S. C. 1199. In another case an action was brought to recover damages for injury to a wall by the overflow from a sewer vested in the defendants. In times of storm the water filled the sewer, and was forced up a branch drain into a brook adjoining the wall, which was thereby damaged. The jury found that the defendants were not negligent in not having sufficient sewers to carry off the sewage, that the overflow arose from an extraordinary storm which could not have been relieved by ordinary care, but that the defendants should, having regard to a previous overflow in the preceding year, have had storm openings put in the sewer. The Court of Appeal held that what the plaintiff was seeking to compel the defendants to do amounted to an alteration of, or improvement in, their system for the purpose of carrying off storm water, and that the only remedy was by complaint to the L. G. B. (Jones v. Barking U. D. C., 15 T. L. R. 92). Note to Section 15.

In Whitfield v. Bishop Auckland U. D. C., Times, November 22nd, 1897, an action was brought to recover damages for negligence in failing to maintain and repair a sewer. The jury found that the sewer was badly constructed by reason of defective joints; that it was improperly and negligently maintained, because the defendants did not open out the whole of it on an occasion when they partially repaired it, and that the plaintiff's houses had been injured by the escape of water from the sewer. On these findings, WRIGHT, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff; and an appeal failed (W. N. (1898) 37).

Baron v. Portslade U. D. C. (p. 75, post), was a successful action for breach of the duty to "cleanse" an open sewer in accordance with s. 19; Lord HALSBURY, L.C., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, said as to s. 299: "I agree that the maintenance of a sewer is not the same thing as that which it is the authority's duty to do by virtue of s. 19. . . . Section 299 does not, in my opinion, touch the duty of the authority to use proper diligence in the management of existing sewers, and I cannot see either in the section or in the cases cited anything to take away the right of action of a person who has sustained an injury through the neglect of the authority." In Att.-Gen. v. Lewes Corporation, [1911] 2 Ch. 495; 76 J. P. 1, a watercourse had been culverted and converted into a sewer. The brickwork of the culvert was in bad repair, and when the tide dammed the sewage back it was constantly forced through holes and cracks on to land of the relator plaintiff. He was held entitled to damages. It is not clear whether this decision was based on the view that s. 299 has no references to the physical condition of a sewer (cf. Baron v. Portslade U. D. C.; Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation, supra), or on the view (see per SWINFEN EADY, J., at [1911] 2 Ch. 507) that s. 299 gives no remedy in damages; the latter seems inconsistent with Robinson v. Workington Corporation, supra.

Remedy in metropolis.

It should be mentioned that there is no section in the Metropolis Management Acts corresponding to s. 299, post. It has, therefore, been held that mandamus will lie to compel performance of the duty imposed by the corresponding sections of these Acts. See R. v. St. Mary, Islington, Times, August 3rd, 1898; R. (or Lee District Board) v. London C. C. (1899), 64 J. P. 20; 82 L. T. 396; St. Matthew. Bethnal Green (Vestry) v. London School Board, [1898] A. C. 190; 62 J. P. 532. In an earlier case it was held that the proper form of remedy was not a motion for a prerogative writ of mandamus, but an action for a declaration and a mandamus (R. v. St. Giles, Camberwell (Vestry of) (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 337; 61 J. P. 217).

Section does not authorise commission of a nuisance.

Although an authority may under s. 18, post, p. 74, cover or pipe in a watercourse which has in fact become a "sewer," the present section does not entitle them to arch over a watercourse containing pure water, with a view to its afterwards carrying sewage, for the Act does not authorise the commission of a nuisance (Att.-Gen. v. Hackney L. B. (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 626: see also Pentpey v. Lynn Paving Commissioners (1865), 12 L. T. 818). Nor may they construct a sewer which will cause a nuisance by its discharge into a stream (see cases in notes to s. 17), or on to land (see Brown v. Dunstable (Mayor, etc. of), p. 68, post; Lamacraft v. St. Thomas' R. S. A (1880), 44 J. P. 441; 42 L. T. 365).

Powers for making sewers—

16. Any local authority may carry any sewer through across or under any turnpike road, or any street (a) or place laid out as or intended for a street, or under (b) any cellar or vault which may be under the pavement or carriageway of any street, and, after giving reasonable notice in writing to the owner or occupier (c) (if on the report of the surveyor it appears necessary (d)), into through or under (e) any lands whatsoever within their district (f).

Section 16. They may also (subject to the provisions of this Act relating to sewage works without the district of the local authority (g)) exercise all or any of the powers given by this section without their district for the purpose of outfall or distribution of sewage.

in streets, public or private;

(a) See the definition of this word in s. 4, ante, p. 15. An authority were held entitled to lay a sewer in a private road (Taylor v. Corporation of Oldham (1876), 4 Ch. D. 395; followed in Hill v. Wallasey L. B., p. 132, post. And see Maddock v. Wallasey L. B. (1886), 55 L. J. Q. B. 267; 50 J. P. 404).

The words "through across or under," leave it to the discretion of the authority whether they will carry the sewer above or under a street, the legislature assuming that they will carry it in such manner as not to interfere with the traffic (per JESSEL, M.R., in Roderick v. Aston, L. B. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 328; 41 J. P. 516).

(b) Not "into, through, or across" (Roderick v. Aston L. B., supra).

in private lands;

(c) These words were wanting in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 45, and it was left vague to whom the notice was to be given. Here it is provided that notice is to be given to the owner (see s. 4, ante, p. 8, for this definition), or to the occupier. The interposition of these words has given some awkwardness to the parenthesis; but the report of the surveyor relates not to the notice, but to the necessity for passing through the lands. An injunction may be granted to restrain an authority from constructing a sewer through private lands, on the ground that reasonable notice in writing has not been given, and that the surveyor has not reported the construction to be necessary as required by this section (New River Co. v. Ware Union R. S. A. (1883), L. J. Notes of Cases, p. 20; Lewis v. Weston-super-Mare L. B., infra). But if the work was done with the owner's assent, he will not succeed in obtaining an injunction or damages merely because the preliminary requirements of the section have not been complied with: see Long v. Fulham Vestry (1898), 47 W. R. 56. Nor will he as a rule succeed on technical grounds when he has had full knowledge of the authority's proposals. Thus, in one case, an interlocutory injunction was applied for on the ground that reasonable notice had not been given and that the report of the surveyor did not show it to be necessary to carry the sewer through the plaintiff's land. CHANNELL, J., refused an injunction, holding that if there were any defects in the notice or report they could easily be remedied, and the Court of Appeal also refused to interfere (Hutchings v. Seaford U. D. C. Times, November 11th, 1898). The action came on for trial, after the sewer had been laid, and the plaintiff asked for a mandatory injunction to remove it. It appeared that it was constructed across a field, and that there had been long negotiations between the parties, and in these circumstances NORTH, J., said that it did not matter whether a week or six days' notice was sufficient, and that as it had been shown that the sewer was necessary, judgment must be given for the defendants (Times, November 6th, 1899); cf. also Cleckheaton U. D. C. v. Firth, on p. 95, post; Montgomerie & Co. v. Haddington Corporation, [1908] A. C. 170, and Scott v. Dunoon Magistrates, [1909] S. C. 1093, where a purchaser of land failed to compel the removal of a sewer, the existence of which was unknown to him at the time of purchase. It was there held that the provision for giving notice was for the owner's protection, and could be waived by him.

Report of surveyor, and notice, necessity for;

Sufficiency of notice.

As to the authentication and service of the notice, see ss. 266, 267, post. For forms of report and notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., pp. 511, 512. A notice, specifying the object to be the construction of a sewer of certain dimensions, to enter at a certain spot and to go in an oblique direction from that spot without a map was held to be a reasonable one (Cleckheaton I. S. H. Society v. Jackson (1866), 14 W. R. 950). The notice may be withdrawn at any time before the commencement of the work (Davis v. Witney U. D. C. (1899), 63 J. P. 279; 15 T. L. R. 275). Perhaps, however, if the landowner has in consequence of the service of the notice sustained any damage, he may, notwithstanding its withdrawal, recover compensation for such damage (ibid., per A. L. SMITH, L.J.).

Discretion of authority.

(d) In Derby (Earl) v. Bury Commissioners (1868—1869), L. R. 3 Ex. 121; 4 Ex. 222; 33 J. P. 424, the Exchequer Chamber ruled that "the necessity for making a new sewer being ascertained as a matter of fact, it was for the local authority to exercise their judgment in what direction that new sewer should be made through the adjoining land, and so long as they exercise an honest discretion without misconduct or negligence, they are not liable to have their judgment overruled in a court of law"; cf. Stroud v. Wandsworth Board of Works, [1894] 1 Q. B. 64; 58 J. P. 40.

The provisions of this section are extended to the laying of water mains by s. 54, post, p. 128. In December, the surveyor of the defendants, an urban authority, died. In January they, by resolution, appointed A. P., an engineer in their employment, "surveyor to the board until a further permanent surveyor be appointed." In March, A. P. reported to the defendants that it was "desirable and advisable" that their water main should be carried in a particular direction from one point to another, and that it would be "necessary" to lay it through land belonging to the plaintiff. This report was signed "your surveyor, A. P." Four days after its date X. Y. was duly appointed surveyor to the defendants, and A. P., who was a candidate for the office, was retained in their service as waterworks engineer. The report was considered and adopted by the board in April, and in May a notice in pursuance thereof was served on the plaintiff that the defendants intended to carry their main through a part of his lands. Upon motion made in an action by the plaintiff for an injunction to restrain the defendants from so doing it was held,—First, that the word "necessary" must be construed as meaning "necessary for the efficient discharge of the duty in the way most for the benefit of the public";—Secondly, that upon the words of s. 16 the person to determine the necessity was the surveyor; and that if the court found that he had exercised his judgment and come to a conclusion in good faith, it ought not to interfere, even although other courses were shown to be practicable by which entry on private lands might be avoided; and, Thirdly, that "the surveyor" mentioned in s. 16 must, in the case of an urban authority, be the fit and proper person duly appointed to be the surveyor under s. 189 of the Act, and no other; that A. P. was not "the surveyor" of the defendants within the meaning of ss. 16 and 189; and that, as the report on which the proceedings of the defendants were founded was not the report of "the surveyor," the plaintiff was entitled to an interlocutory injunction (Lewis v. Weston-super-Mare L. B. (1888), 40 Ch. D. 55); cf. R. v. Halkett, [1910] 1 K. B. 50; 74 J. P. 12, where it was held that an officer appointed to act as a chief constable's deputy during the latter's holiday, could not give the written consent required for a prosecution under the Sunday Observance Act, 1871. The Weston-super-Mare Case, supra, was distinguished in Kendal v. Lewisham Borough Council (1903), 67 J. P. 236; 19 T. L. R. 384, KEKEWICH, J., holding that an order under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 105, is valid if made by an acting surveyor of the council, on the ground that in s. 105 the expression is "surveyor for the time being." An appeal was settled ((1903), 20 T. L. R. 21).

In Brown v. Kirkcudbright Magistrates (1905), 8 F. 77, a surveyor reported that a certain course for a proposed sewer "seems the best and most practical way of taking it . . . to carry out this plan it is necessary" to carry the sewer across certain lands:—Held, under a very similar provision, to be a sufficient report.

Extent of authority's powers: works authorised.

(e) Under this section a local board proceeded to carry a sewer across the plaintiff's pleasure grounds, on such a level that the bottom of the sewer would be only slightly below the surface, and a permanent embankment about six feet high would be made. The Court of Appeal held that they might do so, and that the Act did not confine them to carrying a sewer underground (Roderick v. Aston L. B. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 328; 41 J. P. 516), followed in Morris v. Mynyddislwyn U. D. C., [1917] 2 K. B. 309; 81 J. P. 261. A manhole is part of the sewer, and may be made without purchasing land for the purpose, the owner of the land being entitled only to compensation for the damages arising from making it (Swanston v. Twickenham L. B. (1879), 11 Ch. D. 838). But an engine house with pump and machinery erected partly above and partly below the level of the ground, for lifting and forcing sewage along a rising main from one part of a district to another where there is a common outfall, is not part of a sewer for the purposes of this section, but is a work for the purpose of receiving and otherwise disposing of sewage within s. 27, post, p. 89, for which the necessary land must be purchased or leased (King's College, Cambridge v. Uxbridge R. D. C.,

Note to Section 16.

[1901] 2 Ch. 768). An iron pipe laid temporarily to carry off effluent water from sewage works is a sewer within this provision (Tottenham L. B. v. Button (1886), 2 T. L. R. 828). It has been doubted whether an "overflow" sewer is a sewer for all purposes within the meaning of the Act (see Leeds and District Worsted Dyers' and Finishers' Association v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board (1906), 70 J. P. 480; 5 L. G. R. 72), but it is submitted that such a sewer is a sewer within the meaning of s. 16.

If an owner of land refuses to allow an authority to enter for the purpose of making a sewer under this section, it would appear that they ought to commence an action for a declaration of their right to enter, for it seems that s. 305 does not enable them to obtain from a court of summary jurisdiction an order authorising such entry (per COCKBURN, C.J., in Lamacraft v. St. Thomas' R. S. A. (1880), 44 J. P. 441; 42 L. T. 365; and see to the same effect per DENMAN, J., in Wheatcroft v. Matlock L. B. (1885), 52 L. T. 356). "The word 'lands' as used in this section is, by the definition clause (s. 4), extended so as to mean any tenement or hereditament, and obviously includes lands covered with water": per LINDLEY, L.J., in Durrant v. Branksome U. D. C., [1897] 2 Ch. 291, 301; and see also Dell v. Chesham U. D. C., [1921] 3 K. B. 427; 85 J. P. 186. So that the section enables an authority to carry their sewers into streams, etc., subject, of course, to s. 17, post, p. 60, and to making compensation under s. 308, post. The right is subject also to the limitations imposed by s. 327. See that section and Thames Conservators v. Walton-upon-Thames U. D. C., in the notes thereto.

A local authority are liable in an action for damages, and may be restrained by injunction from proceeding under this section, if the proposed sewer would cause a nuisance (Lamacraft v. St. Thomas' R. S. A., supra).

Sewers under canals and railways:

In carrying sewers under canals and other properties which are the subject of special protective provisions (see ss. 327, 332), an authority must be careful to obtain all requisite consents. Railway property is not mentioned in the sections quoted, but it is desirable that the company should be consulted before a sewer is laid under such property. Where it is proposed to lay a sewer beneath a railway line, the M. of H. require the company's consent before they will sanction a loan for the scheme. In the Metropolitan Water Board v. L. B. & S. C. Ry. Co., [1915] 2 K. B. 297; 79 J. P. 337; under a private Act the Board were granted like powers with respect to the laying of water mains and pipes as are exercisable by Local Authorities under the P. H. Act, 1875. Further, the Act provided that the Board shall not without the consent in writing of the railway companies under their common seal purchase or acquire any of the lands or property of the railway companies, but the Board may acquire and the railway companies shall if required grant to the Board an easement or right of constructing and maintaining works on, through, in, under, over, or along such lands and property, the sum to be paid therefor to be settled by agreement or arbitration. It was held that the Board were not bound to acquire or pay for any easement or right of constructing and maintaining the main but were entitled under the above powers to exercise the power of local authorities as to carrying of water mains through lands without acquiring an easement.

Under the corresponding sections of the Metropolis Management Acts it was held that a sewer might be made, subject to compensation being paid, without actually taking lands under the provisions of those Acts which enable lands to be taken (North London Rail. Co. v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1859), 28 L. J. Ch. 909; 23 J. P. 515; Hughes v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1861), 25 J. P. 675; 4 L. T. 318); and the same view has been taken of the corresponding sections of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1897 (Caledonian Rail. Co. v. Perth District Committee (1901), 3 F. 1029). Where a local authority, having power under a local Act to erect and maintain electric cable standards "on, in, over or under any street or road," erected such a standard in the pavement, it was held that their act, although the standard was sunk in the soil to a considerable depth, did not amount to a "taking of land" (Escott v. Newport Corporation, [1904] 2 K. B. 369; 68 J. P. 135). Under an earlier Act, the surveyor of a local board having reported that it was necessary to make a sewer through N.'s lands, the necessary steps were taken and authority given to the surveyor. N. obstructed the surveyor; and, being summoned before justices for so doing, contended that proceedings ought first to have been taken to acquire the land under the Lands Clauses Act. It was held that this was no answer to the summons, as the land need not have been so acquired before the sewer was laid in it (Thornton v. Nutter (1867), 31 J. P. 419). "It is said that independently of this section they (the authority) have power to purchase land, and that what they are doing is injuring the plaintiffs to such an extent, that it is equivalent to taking the whole of the land. Well, if what is done is equivalent to taking the whole of the land, the plaintiffs will get compensation for the whole of the land" : per JESSEL, M.R., in Roderick v. Aston L. B., p. 55, ante. See also the remarks of the same judge, quoted on p. 48, ante. In Jones v. Conway and Colwyn Bay Joint Water Supply Board (1893), 2 Ch. 603 ; 57 J. P. 501, at p. 608, NORTH, J., said : "I see nothing in Sect. 16 to say that a local authority may not enter upon lands within their district before they have drained a single house and that they cannot do so while they are making the sewers, which, when completed, will effect the draining of the district." As to the power of entry on lands of a railway company see Metropolitan Water Board v. L. B. & S. C. Ry. Co., [1915] 2 K. B. 297 ; 79 J. P. 337.

Note to Section 16.

Authority's liability for negligence.

Although the remedy of a person who sustains damage by the laying of a sewer in his lands is to claim compensation under s. 308, post, yet an authority are liable in damages to any person who sustains injury by reason of their negligence in laying it. See notes to s. 308, post, and cases there cited, especially Clothier v. Webster (1862), 6 L. T. 461. As to the liability of an authority for the negligence of their contractor in laying a sewer, see cases cited in the notes to s. 265, post, especially Hardaker v. Idle U. D. C., [1896] 1 Q. B. 335 ; 60 J. P. 196.

Right to support.

An authority making a sewer might or might not, prior to August 25th, 1883, acquire a right to lateral support from owners of adjoining lands (see Metropolitan Board of Works v. Metropolitan Rail. Co. (1868—1869), L. R. 3 C. P. 612 ; 4 C. P. 192 ; Roderick v. Aston L. B., supra ; In re Dudley Corporation, infra ; and Jary v. Barnsley Corporation, infra). Such a right of support might before 1883 have been gained against the owner of the lands in which the sewer was laid, and this might have been taken into account in estimating the compensation to which he was entitled (per JESSEL, M.R., in Roderick v. Aston L. B., supra ; In re Dudley Corporation (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 86 ; 46 J. P. 340 ; Jary v. Barnsley Corporation, [1907] 2 Ch. 600 ; 71 J. P. 468). But since the passing of the Public Health (Support of Sewers) Act, 1883, post, an authority cannot acquire any right of support, vertical or lateral, as against the owner of mines, except as in that Act provided (s. 4). It would appear, therefore, that in general the right or obligation of support should not be taken into account in estimating the compensation for laying a sewer in private lands, as such a right is not now conferred by enjoyment for any length of time, and may under the Act here referred to form the subject of future compensation.

Compensation.

As to the assessment of compensation, see Colac (Ratepayers of) v. Summerfield, [1893] A. C. 187, and cases cited in notes to s. 308, post. And see also Acquisition of Land (Assessment of Compensation) Act, 1919, in Vol. II. It would appear that the owner of the soil of a highway under which a sewer is laid is entitled to compensation for damage done to the subsoil (Northam Bridge and Roads (Proprietors of) v. South Stoneham R. D. C. (1907), 71 J. P. 345 ; 23 T. L. R. 476 ; cf. Ramsden v. Manchester, etc. Rail. Co. (1848), 1 Ex. 723). A notice to lay a sewer was given under this section and the owner claimed compensation. Both parties appointed arbitrators to determine the amount of "damage caused by the construction and execution of the sewer," but after they had met the authority withdrew their notice, the works not having been commenced, and offered to pay the owner's taxed costs up to the time of such withdrawal. The arbitrators awarded £10 as compensation for the damage sustained and also costs. It was held that they had no jurisdiction to award either damages or costs under the submission in question (Davis v. Witney U. D. C. (1899), 63 J. P. 279 ; 15 T. L. R. 275). Semble, however, that compensation might have been allowed for expenses properly incurred between the date of the notice and its withdrawal if this question had been submitted (ibid.).

(f) The P. H. A., 1848, s. 45, did not contain these words. But notwithstanding the generality of the expression, it was held that a local board could not make sewers out of their district (Haywood v. Lowndes (1859), 28 L. J. Ch. 400). This decision led to the passing of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, which contained the enactment in the next paragraph, and the provisions therein referred to, which are set out in ss. 32—34, post, pp. 94–96. As to the power of an authority outside the boundary of its district in other respects see R. v. Warner (1858), 27 L. J. M. C. 144; Hornsey (Mayor of) v. Birkbeck Freehold Land Society, [1906] 1 K. B. 521; 70 J. P. 140; Shoreditch Borough Council v. Wakeham (1905), 69 J. P. 239; R. v. Cheshire JJ.; Ex parte Vyner (No. 2) (1909), 73 J. P. 499; 101 L. T. 683; Alderson v. Bishop Auckland U. D. C., [1913] 2 K. B. 324; and cf. Wordie v. Lanarkshire C. C. (1895), 23 R. 168.

Outfall and distribution works.

(g) See ss. 32—34, post, pp. 94–96. These sections are, by s. 54, post, p. 128, rendered applicable also to the laying of water mains without the district, even where the consent of the adjoining authority has been procured under s. 285, post. See Jones v. Conway and Colwyn Bay Joint Water Supply Board, [1893] 2 Ch. 603; 57 J. P. 501.

Sewage to be purified before being discharged into streams.

17. Nothing in this Act shall authorise any local authority to make or use any sewer drain or outfall for the purpose of conveying sewage or filthy water into any natural stream or watercourse, or into any canal pond or lake until such sewage or filthy water is freed from all excrementitious or other foul or noxious matter such as would affect or deteriorate the purity and quality of the water in such stream or watercourse or in such canal pond or lake.

General effect of section.

This clause formed a proviso to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, s. 4, and, though it appears here as a separate section, is to be regarded as a proviso (see Harrington (Earl of) v. Derby Corporation, on p. 69, post, and cf. note to s. 1, on p. 1, ante). Its effect is that if the sewage or filthy water be duly purified in the manner described, it may be discharged into the stream, canal, lake, or pond (Durrant v. Branksome U. D. C., [1897] 2 Ch. 291). The only prohibition contained in the section as regards natural streams is against conveying into any natural stream such sewage or filthy water as will prejudicially affect the purity of the stream. Therefore where sewage or other filthy water is conveyed into an already polluted stream no offence is committed against the section unless the stream is thereby made fouler than it was before (Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, etc. Drainage Board, p. 62, post). In Dell v. Chesham U. D. C., [1921] 3 K. B. 427; 85 J. P. 186, it was held that "filthy water" is distinguishable from "sewage" and includes any matter, whether "foul" or "noxious" which would "affect or deteriorate the purity and quality of the water."

In that case surface water from a road which had long drained into watercress beds and through them into the river by reason of tar treatment of the road surface was rendered impure. It was held that such road water was "noxious matter" within the section, and that although the defendants had power so to treat the road surface (under s. 11, sub-s. 2, of the Local Government Act, 1888), that did not justify the damage to the plaintiff without showing that it was a necessary consequence of the exercise of the power.

"Stream or watercourse."

As to what is a "stream or watercourse," see note to s. 69, post, p. 148, and Pearce v. Croydon U. D. C. (1910), 74 J. P. 429. In that case the defendants caused certain surface drainage to flow across the plaintiff's land, and pleaded (a) that there was a "watercourse" across such land, or (b) that there was a "sewer" across it, and that they were entitled to turn the water into such watercourse or sewer. The land was subject to floods by periodical "bourne flows" from the chalk, and the course taken by such flows was the alleged watercourse or sewer. It was held on the facts that such course was neither a watercourse nor a sewer, and that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for trespass and an injunction. As to what constitutes a "natural stream or watercourse" flowing in a defined channel but eventually burrowing into and being absorbed by the land, see Maxwell-Willshire v. Bromley R. D. C., 82 J. P. 12. As to a stream or watercourse becoming a "sewer," see p. 26, ante. The section does not justify a discharge into an agricultural ditch which is not a natural stream or watercourse and which, though a "sewer," is one "made for profit" (Phillimore v. Watford R. D. C., [1913] 2 Ch. 434; 77 J. P. 453).

Whether drains once connected to Generally speaking, an authority cannot disconnect a drain once properly connected with their sewer in order to avoid difficulties arising from the discharge of such sewer (Ainley v. Kirkheaton L. B. (1891), 60 L. J. Ch. 734; 55 J. P. 230). In that sewer may be disconnected by an authority.

case the plaintiffs, owners of a large mill in the defendants' district, built water-closets for the accommodation of their workmen, and connected the same by a drain with the defendants' sewer. The sewer was formerly an open watercourse, and drained into a natural watercourse. Proceedings were taken against the defendants for fouling this watercourse, and an application for a mandamus to compel them to make a proper system of drainage was adjourned upon their undertaking to close the communication between the plaintiffs' drain and their sewer, or to take proceedings against the plaintiffs under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts. The defendants thereupon gave to the plaintiffs formal notice of their intention to cut off the drain, and the plaintiffs brought an action to restrain them from so doing. The plaintiffs had not given any notice to the defendants of their intention to connect their drain with the sewer; but the connection had been in existence for eight years, and the judge found that it was not proved to have been made in contravention of s. 21, post. It was held that s. 21 conferred on the plaintiffs the right to drain into the existing sewer, and that it lay on the defendants to see that the sewer was so arranged that it did not contravene s. 17. STIRLING, J., held that the duty is thrown upon the authority to make all necessary sewers, and that it is for them to see that the sewers so made do not convey any sewage water into any natural stream or watercourse until the sewage is freed from all excrementitious or foul or noxious matter—that is to say, that they are not prohibited from making a sewer, the natural effect of which would be to convey such sewage into a stream or watercourse, but before they use it they must take care that the sewage is free from the foul and noxious matter. He held also that the section affects not the individual owner, but the local authority, and that the right conferred by s. 21 on an owner of premises to connect his drains with a sewer was an absolute right. This decision has since been frequently followed; see cases in note (d) to s. 21, p. 79, post. It may well be, however, that an authority could by injunction compel the disconnection of a drain proved to have been improperly connected, e.g., without complying with the formalities required by s. 21, or to a sewer not intended for the conveyance of sewage; see cases cited in notes to s. 21 on p. 79, post, and Gibbings v. Hungerford, [1904] 1 I. R. 211. In that case the corporation of C. had for many years by permission discharged surface-water from a public road into a pond on the plaintiff's land through a drain belonging to the corporation. Subsequently, as the drain became offensive, the water was, at the plaintiff's request, diverted into a cesspool made by the corporation on his land. By direction of the corporation the defendant H. connected some new houses with the drain. No permission was given by the plaintiff for this to be done. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction against the corporation and H. restraining them from discharging the house sewage on his land, and to a mandatory injunction to disconnect the houses from the drain, but that the corporation should pay the costs both of the plaintiff and H. There was a difference of opinion as to whether the act of an authority in directing or permitting sewage to be delivered into a sewer from which it cannot be discharged without creating a nuisance, is ab initio unlawful, rendering every person contributing to the nuisance liable to be restrained. FITZGIBBON, L.J., thought that individuals who had connected their drains might be restrained; HOLMES, L.J., thought otherwise. Lord ASHBOURNE, L.C., thought the injunction was rightly granted against both. The facts of the case were peculiar, and it cannot be regarded as a precedent for the granting of injunctions against persons who lawfully connect their drains with sewers. Liability of authority for polluting a stream.

This is a convenient place for a more detailed statement of the liabilities of local authorities in exercising their powers of making sewers. The following are the principal cases as to the rights of persons against authorities for polluting streams by sewage. (They are for the most part arranged in chronological order.)

In Oldacre v. Hunt (1855), 6 De G. M. & G. 376, a local board proposed to carry a sewer through certain fields into the river Avon. The owners of those fields, which adjoined the river, had watering places therein; they had also a several fishery in the river, though not otherwise interested in the bed of it, and they had not given their consent to the works. The Master of the Rolls granted an injunction to restrain the board from proceeding with the sewer, and this injunction was confirmed by the Lords Justices, assisted by CRESSWELL and WILLIAMS, JJ. In their opinion, the plaintiffs were interested in the river by reason of their watering places, independently of their right to the fishery, which also appeared to the judges to be fairly included under the term land. In Att.-Gen. v. Luton L. B. (1856), 20 J. P. 163, it appeared that the local board carried the whole drainage of the town into the river Lea, which flowed through the land of the relator, who had a mill on its banks. It was not a public navigable river, and a few houses had drained into it previous to 1848; but the works of the board greatly increased the sewage, and polluted the water to such an extent that sheep could not be washed in it. It was held that the board could not justify their proceedings, and that as the relator was interested in the river, and had not given his consent, he was entitled to an interlocutory injunction to restrain them from extending their works. WOOD, V.-C., pointed out that if the owners of the houses erected before 1848 had any right to drain into the river so as to interfere with the plaintiff's rights as a riparian owner such right could only be acquired by prescription, but the board being quite a modern corporation, established since 1848, could have no such rights. The prescriptive right here referred to is merely a right as against individuals. It will be seen hereafter that there can be no prescriptive right to pollute a stream so as to cause a public nuisance. In M. S. & L. Rail. Co. v. Worksop L. B. (1857), 26 L. J. Ch. 345, the plaintiffs, owners of a canal, had a right to supply water to their canal out of such brooks, streams and watercourses as were within 1,000 yards of it, and the exclusive right to the water in the canal. It was held that this power did not so far extend to rain and other surface water, which, being collected on a road, ran along an open gutter into the canal, as to preclude the local board from allowing it to fall through gratings into a sewer which they had made under the road. But it was also held that the board must be restrained from permitting sewage communications to be made between houses and the sewer so long as the sewer discharged into the canal. See also Southampton and Itchin Bridge Co. v. Southampton L. B. (1858), 8 E. & B. 801, an action for polluting a canal by improper and negligent construction and management of a sewer. In Rigby v. Mayor, etc. of Bristol (1860), 29 L. J. Ex. 359, BRAMWELL, B., said: "Suppose a person had, for twenty or thirty years, been in the habit of turning his sewer into a river or other natural stream, it is clear that no action would lie against him for so doing; and why should not a corporation have the power of acquiring a similar right?" There was not, however, in that case any suggestion that the pollution complained of amounted to a public nuisance, nor had the case any reference to the section above set out.

In Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham Corporation (1858), 4 Kay & J. 528, it was held that works executed in pursuance of a statutory duty must be so executed as not to interfere with the private rights of individuals, and that in deciding on the right of a single proprietor to an injunction to restrain such interference, the circumstances that a vast population will suffer (by remaining undrained) unless his rights are invaded, is one which the court cannot consider. The defendants were bound by a local Act, incorporating the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, effectually to drain the town. It was held that they were not justified in so carryng on their operations as to drive away fish and prevent cattle from drinking the water of a river at a point seven miles below the town, where it belonged to the plaintiff. It was held also, that assuming the inhabitants to have had before their Act a right to drain their houses into the river, this circumstance would not justify the defendants in discharging their sewage in such a manner as to subject the plaintiff to the inconvenience of which he now complained. And it was further held, that although the plaintiff had submitted to the injury for nearly four years, trusting to the assurance of the council that they were carrying out a scheme of sewerage by which eventually the evil would be removed, he was not precluded on the ground of laches from now applying for an injunction, the rule in such cases being that the mere prospect of injury does not give a right to this relief. In Bidder v. Croydon L. B. (1862), 6 L. T. 778, the defendants had caused the sewage of the town to be conveyed into the river Wandle. It had not been completely deodorised before entering the river, and had so polluted the water as to kill the fish, and otherwise cause a nuisance. It was held that a riparian owner was entitled to an injunction to restrain further pollution of the water. Sutcliffe v. Booth (1863), 32 L. J. Q. B. 136; 27 J. P. 613, was an action by one riparian proprietor against another, and is only mentioned here in its order as deciding that a watercourse, though artificial, may have been made under such circumstances and have been so used as to give all the rights that the riparian owners would have had if it had been a natural stream. (This case was considered and approved in Roberts v. Richards (1881), 50 L. J. Ch. 297; 51 L. J. Ch. 944, and was followed in Baily & Co. v. Clark, Son & Morland, [1902] 1 Ch. 649.) The case of Att.-Gen. v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1863), 9 L. T. 139, had reference to the Acts incorporating that body; it was held that these Acts did not empower them to create a nuisance by polluting a stream. In Cator v. Lewisham Board of Works (1864), 5 B. & S. 115, the plaintiff was the owner of land through which the Poole river flowed, such land being beyond the defendants' district. The defendants executed drainage works within their district by means of which sewage was conveyed into a tributary of the Poole river. The sewage had for many years been carried into the stream, but only so as to pollute the water in an inappreciable degree; but the result of the defendants' works was to do substantial injury to the plaintiff. It was held by the Exchequer Chamber that the plaintiff was entitled to sue, and was not precluded by the clauses of the Metropolis Management Acts, which give persons who sustain damage the right to compensation, for the defendants were not justified in causing a nuisance. See also Price's Patent Candle Co. v. London C. C., [1908] 2 Ch. 526; 72 J. P. 429 (affirmed, 75 J. P. 329—H. L.), where it was held that nothing in the Metropolis Management Acts authorised the defendants to commit a nuisance by discharging storm water mixed with sewage into a tidal creek. In Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Kingston-on-Thames (1865), 34 L. J. Ch. 481; 29 J. P. 515, the defendants adopted a new scheme of drainage, whereby a largely increased amount of sewage would be poured into the Thames. The court refused to grant an injunction on the ground that there was no evidence of the actual existence or immediate probability of a nuisance, and in general an injunction is granted only when there is actual damage or imminent danger of damage. In Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Commissioners (1866), L. R. 1 Ch. 349; 30 J. P. 419, the sewage of a town had for many years been drained by commissioners acting under a local Act into a stream passing through the plaintiff's land which was beyond their district, without perceptibly polluting it. But for some years before the filing of the bill, in consequence of the increase of the town, the stream became perceptibly polluted, and continued to increase in impurity. The court granted an injunction. They held on the facts that no prescriptive right had been gained, but that assuming that such right could be acquired of draining the sewage into the stream to the injury of the plaintiff, it could only be acquired by the continuance of a perceptible amount of injury for twenty years. They further held that although the fact of prospective nuisance is not in itself a ground for the interference of the court, yet if some degree of present nuisance exists the court will take into account its probable continuance and increase. Upon the subject of prescriptive right, TURNER, L.J., said: "I assume, but without giving any opinion on the point, that such a right might well be acquired, but then I think that it could be acquired only by a continuance of the discharge of sewage prejudicially affecting the estate, at least to some extent, for the period of twenty years." This decision was followed in Liverpool Corporation v. H. Coghill & Son, Ltd., [1918] 1 Ch. 307; 82 J. P. 129. In Fielden v. Blackburn Corporation, W. N. (1866), p. 256, the plaintiff was tenant for life of an estate through which the river Darwen flowed. Three miles above his land the defendants caused the sewage of Blackburn to be discharged into a tributary of the Darwen, causing the stream to be polluted. The court granted an injunction. A canal company was authorised by statute to draw water from a beck for their canal. The water in the beck became polluted by the reception of drainage, and the canal consequently became very offensive. The company were indicted for a nuisance and convicted (see 6 B. & S. 631). WOOD, V.-C., granted an injunction to restrain them from continuing to draw polluted water from the beck (Att.-Gen. v. Proprietors of the Bradford Canal (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 71). In Att.-Gen. v. Richmond (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 306; 30 J. P. 708, the defendants were a highway board, and were the local authority for executing the Nuisances Removal Acts. The court restrained them from allowing any fresh communications to be made with a sewer constructed by their predecessors in office, which occasioned a nuisance to the inhabitants of the adjoining parish by draining into a stream flowing through such parish, although from the limited nature of their powers no order could be made against the board which would have the effect of compelling them to abate the nuisance altogether by stopping up the sewer and ceasing to drain into the stream. Crossley v. Lightowler (1867), L. R. 2 Ch. 478, was an action between riparian owners, in which several important points were decided. It was held that where a prescriptive right to foul a stream has been acquired, the fouling must not be considerably enlarged to the damage of other people. The fact that a stream is fouled by others is not a defence to a suit to restrain the fouling by one. The mere suspension of the exercise of a prescriptive right is not sufficient to destroy the right without some evidence of an intention to abandon it; but where dye-works had not been used for more than twenty years, and had been allowed to go to ruin, it was held that any right of fouling a stream attached to them was lost. The owner of land on the banks of a river can maintain a suit to restrain the fouling of the water of the river without showing that the fouling is actually injurious to him. C. wishing to prevent the water of a river from being fouled by some dye-works, purchased from the owners of the dye-works a piece of land on the banks of the river without communicating to them his object. It was held that in the absence of any express reservation by the owners of the dye-works of the right of fouling, C. could maintain a suit to restrain it. In Lilly-white v. Trimmer (1867), 36 L. J. Ch. 525, the plaintiff was the owner of premises on the river Wey, below the town of Alton, the local board of which caused the sewage of the town to pass into the river about a mile and a half above his premises. The plaintiff sought to restrain the board from so doing, alleging that he and his family suffered materially in health and otherwise by the nauseous odours created by the sewage, and that the water of the river, which prior to the construction of the sewage works was a pure stream, had been rendered totally unfit for agricultural and domestic purposes. MALINS, V.-C., held that upon the balance of the evidence there was no case for an injunction. He laid down as a settled rule of law that where a work, though of great public importance, can only be effected by interfering with private rights, the private rights must prevail, and the public work must be carried out as best it can without such interference (following Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, p. 62, ante); but where a great public object is to be attained, such as the drainage of a town, the court should not unnecessarily put any difficulty in the way of carrying it into effect. He held further that in considering questions of nuisance the court must have regard to the extent of the nuisance and to the balance of convenience, and if the extent of the inconvenience sustained is trifling, and such as may readily be compensated by money, the right of parties creating the nuisance must not be interfered with when the object which they seek to attain is of considerable importance, and that the court should not interfere by injunction to prevent a nuisance in cases where the injury was temporary and trifling, though it ought to do so in cases where it was permanent and serious. In Att.-Gen. v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum (1868), L. R. 4 Ch. 146; 33 J. P. 196, it was held that when a plaintiff had proved his right to an injunction against a nuisance, it was no part of the duty of the court to inquire in what way the defendant could best remove it. The plaintiff is entitled to an injunction at once, unless the removal of the injury is physically impossible; and it is the duty of the defendant to find his own way out of the difficulty, whatever inconvenience or expense it may put him to. But when the difficulty of removing the nuisance is great, the court will suspend the operation of the injunction for a time, with liberty to the defendant to apply for an extension of time. An information was filed at the relation of a local board, praying for an injunction to restrain the visiting justices of a county lunatic asylum from allowing the sewage from the asylum to pollute a certain stream. The fact of the pollution being attributable in part to the sewage of the asylum being proved, the court granted an injunction, but suspended its operation for three months to enable the defendants to make the necessary arrangements, with liberty to apply for an extension of time. The court expressed an opinion that if a public body, which had powers given to it by statute for the performance of a particular object, exercised its powers so as to injure the property of others, it was responsible for the injury, unless the act done was absolutely necessary for the performance of the object of the statute; and that it was no answer to an information at the relation of a local board to abate a nuisance arising from sewage, that the board had power itself to remedy the evil by making sewers, for it was the duty of the board to prevent a nuisance arising in its district, instead of putting the ratepayers to the expense of additional works. A local Act for the improvement of Leeds incorporated the clauses of the Towns Improvement

Clauses Act, 1847, as to making and maintaining public sewers and the drainage of houses, except in so far as they were inconsistent with it, or expressly varied or excepted. By the local Act the corporation were authorised to construct main sewers to receive the sewage of the town and to convey it into the Aire. It was held that the power to drain into the river was controlled by s. 107 of the Act of 1847, which forbade the commission of a nuisance; that though the river was polluted before it received the drainage of Leeds, the landowners on the banks were entitled to restrain the further pollution; and that though the sewers had been completed and in operation for sixteen years before proceedings were taken, the court would interfere at the suit of the landowners (Att.-Gen. v. Corporation of Leeds (1870), L. R. 5 Ch. 583; 34 J. P. 708). In Att.-Gen. v. Gee (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 131; 34 J. P. 596, a bill and information filed to restrain a local board from discharging sewage into a river, were dismissed with costs on the ground that the injury proved was trifling, MALINS, V.-C., following his previous judgment in Lillywhite v. Trimmer, supra. In North Staff. Rail. Co. v. Tunstall (1870), 39 L. J. Ch. 131, the council of a borough acting as a local board constructed a sewage system, which resulted in a gradually increasing nuisance to the plaintiffs and the public generally. It being represented on their behalf that the evil could only be dealt with effectually by a comprehensive scheme, and that no such scheme could prudently be adopted pending a parliamentary inquiry into the whole subject, the court granted an immediate injunction against any extension of the system, and restrained the continuance of the existing nuisance from and after the expiration of one year from the filing of the bill. In Holt v. Corporation of Rochdale (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 354; 35 J. P. 6, a local Act provided that the corporation should not cause any new sewer to open or drain into the river Roche above a weir. They had enlarged and deepened an old sewer, and an injunction was granted to restrain them from causing or permitting any sewer to be opened into the new sewer, or any other new sewer to open or drain into the river above the weir. From this and other cases already mentioned where authority has been given to discharge sewage into streams, it will be seen that it is necessary to inquire whether the local Act giving such authority does not incorporate the provisions of this or some other Act, from which it must be inferred that the discharge contemplated was to be such as would not cause the pollution of the streams. In the absence of some such provisions, however, the Act may give a positive authority to discharge sewage into a stream, and the effect of such a statutory authority is illustrated in the case of Lea Conservancy Board v. Mayor, etc. of Hertford (1884), 48 J. P. 628; 1 C. & E. 299. In that case the town of Hertford had long drained into the river Lea, and a company obtained a local Act to make a sewer, intercept and purify the sewage, and then discharge the effluent into the river, all the inhabitants being at the same time prohibited from draining direct into the river. The Act provided that the company should not discharge sewage water into the Lea until after being purified by the best known process. It was held that the statutory provision superseded all common law rights; that the company were entitled to discharge the effluent water purified by the best process; and that no action lay against the company for polluting the river, though that process was still imperfect. For another case in which it was held on different grounds that a corporation had a legal right to send sewage into a tidal river, see Somersetshire Drainage Commissioners v. Bridgwater (Mayor, etc. of) (1898), 81 L. T. 729.

In Att.-Gen. v. Cockermouth L. B. (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 172; 38 J. P. 660, an injunction was granted against a local board for polluting a river on the information of the Attorney-General without proof of injury to the public, the pollution of the river being a transgression of powers conferred by statute; but a bill filed by a local board, whose waterworks were supplied from the river eight miles further down, was dismissed with costs in the absence of proof of nuisance. Where there is a breach of an express statutory provision, the Attorney-General may obtain an injunction without proof of damage or injury to the public. See also Att.-Gen. v. Willesden U. D. C. (1896), 12 T. L. R. 528; Att.-Gen. v. Dorchester Corporation (1906), 70 J. P. 281; 94 L. T. 682. But he is not entitled on proving his case to an injunction as a matter of right; see per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., in Att.-Gen. v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., [1900] 1 Q. B. 78; 63 J. P. 772; per FARWELL, J., in Att.-Gen. v. Wimbledon House Estate Co., Ltd., [1904] 2 Ch. 34; 68 J. P. 341; and in Att.-Gen. v. West Gloucestershire Water Co., [1909] 2 Ch. 338; 73 J. P. 543; Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, etc. Drainage Board, [1910] 1 Ch. 48; 74 J. P. 57; ibid., per Lord ROBSON, [1912] A. C. 788; 76 J. P. 481; Att.-Gen. v. Kerr and Ball (1915), 79 J. P. 51. See also as to laches in actions by the Attorney-General: Att.-Gen. v. South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. (1909), 25 T. L. R. 408; Att.-Gen. v. Grand Junction Canal Co., [1909] 2 Ch. 505; 73 J. P. 421; Att.-Gen. v. Warren Smith (1912), 76 J. P. 253.

In Att.-Gen. v. Barnsley Corporation, W. N. (1874), p. 37, JAMES, L.J., said there could be no prescriptive right to create a public nuisance by fouling a river. (This is the general rule of law with regard to a public nuisance. See R. v. Cross (1812), 3 Camp. 224; Hulley v. Silverspring's Bleaching, etc. Co. (1922), 91 L. J. Ch. 207; 86 J. P. 30). For cases where a claim of a prescriptive right to drain sewage into the sea was discussed, see Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., and decisions cited therewith on p. 71, post. An injunction to restrain the pollution of the river Trent was granted in Att.-Gen. v. Tunstall L. B., W. N. (1875), p. 66. In the case of a public nuisance the Attorney-General is justified in taking proceedings at the relation of any person, whether residing near the nuisance or not, and whether interested in the property on which the nuisance exists or not. A public corporate body though not formed for the acquisition of gain and making no profit is liable to pay damages in respect of injury caused by its negligence. The Attorney-General and the owner of a canal filed an information and bill against a municipal corporation to restrain them from permitting sewage to be discharged into the canal, and for an inquiry as to damages. It was held that the Attorney-General was justified in taking proceedings at the relation of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction and an inquiry as to damages, although he had permitted an obstruction to remain in the canal, whereby the sewage was prevented from being carried away by the flow of the water (Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Basingstoke (1876), 24 W. R. 817). By the R. S. C., Order XXXVI., r. 58, where damages are to be assessed in respect of any continuing cause of action, they shall be assessed down to the date of assessment. The plaintiff brought an action against a rural sanitary authority for permitting sewage to fall into and pollute a stream running through his land, and obtained judgment for an injunction and damages. The defendants continued to pollute the stream, and three years after the judgment the chief clerk assessed the damages carrying the assessment down to the date of his certificate:—Held, that there was a continuing cause of action within the meaning of the rule, and that the damages had been rightly assessed (Hole v. Chard Union, [1894] 1 Ch. 293)

As to when damages may be granted in lieu of an injunction, see Pennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Co. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 769; 41 J. P. 758. As to the measure of damages, see Tatton v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co. (1879), 44 J. P. 106. As to when a quia timet action will lie to restrain an apprehended injury before actual damage has been done, see Fletcher v. Bealey (1885), 28 Ch. D. 688; Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Manchester, [1893] 2 Ch. 87; 57 J. P. 343; Att.-Gen. v. Nottingham Corporation, [1904] 1 Ch. 673; 68 J. P. 125. As to the right of a reversioner to restrain pollution of a stream, see Jones v. Llanrwst U. D. C., p. 70, post.

In Blackburne v. Somers (1879), 5 L. R. Ir. 1, it was held that there can be no prescriptive right to pollute a stream by the discharge of sewage in such a manner and to such an extent as to be injurious to public health; that even assuming that a prescriptive right to foul a stream with sewage can be acquired, such right must be restricted to the limits of it when the period of prescription commenced; that if the pollution be substantially increased, whether gradually or suddenly, the court will interfere by injunction to restrain the illegal excess, and that if it be impossible to separate the excess from the legal user, the wrongdoer must bear the consequences of any restriction necessary to prevent the excess, even if it unavoidably extends to a total prohibition of the user. This decision was followed in Traill v. McAllister (1890), 25 L. R. Ir. 524. Cf., as to private right of drainage, Watson v. Troughton (1882), 47 J. P. 518; 48 L. T. 508.

A riparian owner is entitled to the use of the water of the stream in its pure and original condition; and if the water becomes fouled by the combined acts of proprietors higher up, he is entitled to proceed against each of them separately, and a defendant cannot escape on the plea that the damage done by him individually is inappreciable (Blair v. Deakin (1887), 52 J. P. 327; 57 L. T. 522). And see Nixon v. Tynemouth Union R. S. A. (1888), 52 J. P. 504. But in every case there must be some appreciable nuisance caused, either by the defendant alone, or by him with others (Ridge v. Midland Rail. Co. (1888), 53 J. P. 55).

Note to Section 17.

From 1832 to 1877, the refuse of a fellmongery, and the washings of dyes used in a coloured rag manufactory, had been discharged into a watercourse. In 1878, the fellmongery was abandoned, and the manufacture of leather boards substituted at the same factory. The pollution caused by the discharge from the leather board manufactory was less than that caused by the fellmongery. The owners of the leather board factory were convicted under a local Act of polluting the stream: —Held, that the conviction must be confirmed, for even if the factory owners had a prescriptive right to foul the stream, it was as fellmongers, and not as leather board manufacturers; and that there was no authority for holding that the variation of the user, although it cast no increased, but even a less, burden on the servient tenement, enabled the factory owners to substitute a business of a totally different kind to that originally carried on by them, and at the same time to maintain their original prescriptive right to pollute the watercourse, even if such right did exist (Clarke v. Somersetshire Drainage Commissioners (1888), 57 L. J. M. C. 96; 52 J. P. 308 n.).

An important distinction has been drawn between cases where a nuisance has been created or increased by acts of the local authority and where it exists independently of their acts, though they may have neglected to provide a proper system of sewage. In Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B. (1879), 12 Ch. D. 102; 44 J. P. 36, the defendants were a local board constituted in November, 1875, under the P. H. A., 1875. The plaintiff complained that for some time before and since the defendants became the sanitary authority, sewage was allowed to fall into a stream passing near his residence so as to pollute it and cause a nuisance to him. It was held that, assuming an actionable nuisance to exist, the defendants were not liable in an action for an injunction and damages, as they had themselves done no act to create or increase the nuisance. And it was laid down that a local board acting under the P. H. A., 1875, causing a nuisance by any act which independently of the statute would have given a cause of action to any person, may be made liable in damages, or be restrained by injunction, unless they can show a justification under the powers of the statute. But if they do not act themselves so as to cause a nuisance, but neglect to perform their duty of providing a satisfactory system of drainage, it is no ground of action by an individual for damages or an injunction. (As to the remedy for a neglect of duty, see notes to s. 15, ante, p. 53.) This decision was followed in Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union (1882), 20 Ch. D. 595. In that case an old sewer discharged into a stream, and a number of persons had acquired prescriptive rights to send their sewage into it. In addition there were others who from time to time sent their sewage into the sewer, so that the total amount of sewage gradually increased. The local board had done nothing in respect of this sewer; but had endeavoured, though without success, to find means for disposing of the sewage of their district. It was held that as the local board had not themselves constructed the sewer, but had only permitted it to be used as formerly by the inhabitants, they were not doing any act which could be restrained under the Public Health Act or the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876. (But see now the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1893, post, and West Riding C. C. v. Holmfirth U. S. A., [1894] 2 Q. B. 842; 59 J. P. 213, where it was held that the grounds upon which the foregoing cases were decided did not apply to the proceedings under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts.) Had it appeared in the Dorking Case that the defendants were neglecting their duty in providing a sufficient sanitary scheme for their district, an aggrieved landowner would have had his remedy under s. 299. See also Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B. (1882), 22 Ch. D. 221. In Ogilvie v. Blything Union R. S. A. (1892), 67 L. T. 18, an action was brought against the authority to restrain the pollution of a ditch running through the main street of a town past the plaintiff's land into the sea. The ditch was covered over as it passed through the town, but was afterwards an open stream, and had been for many years seriously polluted. In 1877, the attention of the defendants was called to the condition of the houses in two new streets, and they required the owners to improve the drains. The owners accordingly ran two drains down the two streets and made communications with the main sewer. These drains were made for the purpose of carrying off surface water, and were not connected with any privies, but in addition to the surface water the slops of the houses were allowed to be thrown down the drains. In 1885, in consequence of a complaint, notices were served upon the occupiers to divert all polluting matter from the sewer, and the inspector of nuisances was ordered to inspect all drains entering the main sewer. The notices so served were all effective in causing an abatement of the nuisance except four. Subsequent directions of the defendants as to cleansing the sewer were duly carried out, the effect of which was to diminish the pollution of it to some extent. It was held that the defendants had been diligent, and had done all they could to abate the nuisance; that it was almost inevitable that some prescriptive rights of drainage should have been acquired, with which the defendants had no authority to interfere; that the defendants had no right physically to disconnect the drains; and that the action could not be maintained. But where by agreement with a local board, a person was allowed to insert a pipe from his house in order to carry away rain water into a brook, but afterwards without leave of the board he sent sewage through the pipe, an injunction was granted against the board on the ground that they had power to stop the drain from being used except according to the agreement, and could do so without causing inconvenience to other persons (Charles v. Finchley L. B. (1883), 23 Ch. D. 767; 47 J. P. 791). A detached portion of the parish of C. had no separate drainage system, but certain houses therein were drained by means of pipes carrying the sewage into cesspools, the overflow pipes from which communicated with main pipes within such detached portion. The drainage of the houses, including such communications, was constructed with the sanction of the C. vestry, as the local authority under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. The main pipes communicated with watercourses within the adjoining district of the F. local board, and the sewage from the cesspools passing through the main pipes into the watercourses caused a nuisance. The F. board brought an information and action (to which the owners and occupiers of the houses were not parties) against the C. vestry, for an injunction to restrain them from permitting, authorising, or directing, any sewage to pass from the detached portion of C. into the watercourses, so as to cause a nuisance:—Held (a), following the opinions expressed in Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union, Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B., and Charles v. Finchley L. B., supra, that the C. vestry could not stop up the communications which they had sanctioned:—Held (b), that inasmuch as the cesspools and drains were acting properly qua cesspools and drains, no proceedings could be successfully taken by the C. vestry against the owners or occupiers of the houses, under s. 85 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855; and that, as the nuisance and its cause were not both within C., it was doubtful whether proceedings could be taken by the C. vestry against the owners or occupiers of the houses under the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855:—Held (c), that, assuming the C. vestry could take proceedings, under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, or the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union, supra, was an authority that the vestry could not be compelled by injunction to take such proceedings:—Held (d), on the authority of Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., supra, that it was not ground for an injunction that the C. vestry were not exercising or performing their other statutory powers and duties:—Held, therefore, on the C. vestry undertaking not to sanction further communications between houses within the detached portion of their parish and the main pipes therein until further order, or without the consent of the F. board, that the claim for an injunction failed (Att.-Gen. v. Clerkenwell Vestry, [1891] 3 Ch. 527). These cases were followed in Brown v. Dunstable (Mayor, etc. of), [1899] 2 Ch. 378; 63 J. P. 519, which was an action by a landowner for an injunction to restrain a corporation from discharging or allowing to be discharged sewage upon his lands from the sewers vested in them, so as to cause a nuisance. The defendants set up a prescriptive right, based on the assumption of a lost grant by the plaintiff's predecessors in title to trustees for the benefit of the inhabitants of the borough, to drain all sewage from any tenements built or to be built within the borough, and to discharge the same on the plaintiff's lands. This claim of right failed. It was proved, however, that there were a number of houses in the borough in respect of which prescriptive rights had been acquired to pass sewage into and along the sewers, and that there were other houses, the connections of which with the sewers had been made with the consent or by the acquiescence of the defendants. It was held that an injunction could not be granted so as to interfere with the prescriptive rights which had been acquired, nor to oblige the defendants to stop up the connections of the other houses which they had sanctioned, but that an injunction must be granted to restrain the defendants from authorising or directing any sewage to flow or be discharged on to the plaintiff's lands from sewers vested in them as the sanitary authority. "Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., supra, only shows that if the complaint be that the local authority have insufficiently carried out the duties imposed upon them by the statute, no action will lie; but it does not show that where a local authority in the course of their work create a nuisance, no action will lie against them. On the contrary, the judgment in that case is that if a legal wrong has been done, an action will lie, unless the legal wrong has been justified by the statute" (per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J., in Dent v. Bournemouth (Mayor, etc. of) (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 395).

When a local authority have not merely used a sewer acquired from their predecessors, but have made additional sewers or have diverted into an old sewer sewage which formerly took a different course, the court may award damages in respect of pollution caused thereby, for the authority in those circumstances cannot say that they have merely succeeded to a defective system of drainage constructed by their predecessors, and have simply permitted the previous user of the sewer to continue, without themselves doing anything, so as to bring themselves within the decisions in Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking, supra, and Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., supra. See Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., infra.

An authority have only a qualified property in the sewers within their district, and cannot prevent persons, who have acquired a prescriptive right to use them from so doing unless they provide other sewers equally effectual. Where a local board had not themselves constructed sewers which were a nuisance, but only permitted them to be used by inhabitants who had acquired a prescriptive right to use them, it was held that the local board did not "cause or suffer" sewage to flow into the Thames within the meaning of s. 64 of the Thames Navigation Act, 1866 (R. v. Staines L. B. (1889), 53 J. P. 358; 60 L. T. 261). Under similar words in the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, it was held that a corporation were liable in respect of sewage turned into an old sewer by them from their modern municipal buildings, but not in respect of house drains which they had allowed to be connected with the sewer (Thames Conservators v. Gravesend Corporation, [1910] 1 K. B. 442; 73 J. P. 381; cf. High Wycombe Corporation v. Thames Conservators (1898), 78 L. T. 463). So too, where an individual had laid sewers and constructed sewage works for his building estate, it was held that the authority, who had taken no part in the construction or management of such sewers or works, could not be said (although the sewers were legally vested in them) to "cause or suffer" a noxious effluent from the works to flow into a river (Waltham Holy Cross U. D. C. v. Lea Conservancy Board (1910), 74 J. P. 253; 103 L. T. 192). See, however, Rochford R. D. C. v. Port of London Authority, [1914] 2 K. B. 916; 78 J. P. 329; where R. v. Staines L. B. and other cases, supra, were questioned. In Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Ltd. (1911), 75 J. P. 295; 104 L. T. 569, another case of privately managed disposal works, a riparian owner sued the persons in control of the works for the loss of cattle and other injury due to the effluent. It was held that he could do so even though the sewers, and perhaps the works, were vested in the authority. For recent cases in which authorities have been made responsible for loss of or injury to cattle, reference may be made to Hague v. Doncaster R. D. C. (1908), 73 J. P. 69; 100 L. T. 121; Lawton v. Rawmarsh U. D. C. (1912), 76 J. P. N. 413; and Brawn v. Brownhills U. D. C. (1913), Times, February 25th.

The decisions in Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., supra; Att.-Gen. v. Dorking Union, supra; R. v. Staines L. B., supra; Brown v. Dunstable Corporation, supra, were followed in Harrington (Earl of) v. Derby Corporation, [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 69 J. P. 62. The sewage of Derby had for many years been discharged into the river Derwent. Such sewage was conveyed (1) by sewers constructed many years ago into which householders had for more than twenty years discharged their sewage; (2) by sewers not laid by the corporation, but which became vested in them when they became the sanitary authority, into which householders had by virtue of their statutory rights made connections; and (3) by sewers laid by the corporation; or was (4) additional sewage arising from the conversion of privies into water-closets under directions given by the corporation. The plaintiff's castle and land was situated on the river some distance below the town, and the water of the river was used for feeding his lake. At the outfall from the lake was a water-wheel, from which power was obtained to pump water from an adjacent well to the castle. Owing to the pollution the supply to the lake had to be cut off, and the use of the water-wheel discontinued. The plaintiff claimed, firstly, an injunction to restrain the corporation from polluting the river in such a way as to prevent him from using the water for the purposes of his lake, and so as to be a nuisance to the castle and estate; secondly, a mandatory order to compel them to do certain works of cleansing and removal of foul matter from the plaintiff's lands; and, thirdly, damages for injuries done by the pollution. In 1898, in an action brought by the county council at the instigation of the plaintiff, an order was made in the Derbyshire County Court that the corporation should abstain from polluting the river contrary to the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876. The corporation, having in 1901 obtained the necessary powers, had since commenced to construct sewage works for the whole of their area. The court held—firstly (a), as to sewage passing through the sewers of the first and second classes, that persons had obtained prescriptive and statutory rights, and that an injunction could not be granted which would interfere with those rights, thus following the Dorking Case, and the other cases above mentioned; (b) that to grant an injunction as to the remainder of the sewage was impracticable; and that, moreover, the county council having obtained their order and the corporation being now engaged in carrying out works in order to comply with it, an injunction was unnecessary. Secondly, that a mandatory order to do work on the plaintiff's land could not be granted, and that the proper remedy was in damages. Thirdly (a), that an action for damages would not lie against the corporation for mere acts of non-feasance or neglect, the plaintiff's proper remedy being under s. 299 of the P. H. A., 1875; but (b) that they were liable in damages in respect of acts done by themselves. Fourthly, that the plaintiff could recover in respect of the cost of providing an engine and new water supply to his fields, and injury to his fishing and a house which he let, but not for loss of amenities of his castle, which he did not wish to let, nor for the silting up of the lake, for he ought to have excluded the polluted water earlier. Fifthly, that damages could be recovered for a period of six years, there being a "continuance of damage or injury" within the meaning of s. 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (cf. Hague v. Doncaster R. D. C., supra, on this point). The Derby Case was followed so far as refusal of an injunction on the ground of prescriptive rights is concerned in Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., p. 71, post; but it was distinguished by the same judge in Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation, p. 71, post, on the ground that there, although prescriptive rights of householders might exist, it did not appear that an injunction to restrain the defendants from committing a nuisance would result in any interference with the rights of the householders; that the defendants had not shown that, if proper control was maintained as regards the times at which the sewage was discharged they could not, without any interruption of the householder's rights, so discharge the sewage as not to commit a nuisance. See also Owen v. Faversham Corporation, infra.

Note to Section 17.

In Jones v. Llanrwst U. D. C., [1911] 1 Ch. 393; 75 J. P. 68, the plaintiff complained that sewers belonging to the defendants discharged crude sewage into a river opposite to his land. He alleged that the sewage seriously polluted the water and thus infringed his riparian rights; and that fæcal matter was deposited on the river bed and banks in such quantities as to occasion a serious nuisance, and that such deposit was a trespass on his land. The defendants contended that the river being a tidal one, the plaintiff had no riparian rights; that the Earl of A., having the undisputed right to license fishing upon both sides of the river, was the true owner of its bed; that the plaintiff, who was a reversioner, could not sue for anything not injurious to the reversion without joining his tenant as co-plaintiff; that the plaintiff was not complaining of a private wrong, but was endeavouring to make the defendants perform a statutory duty; and that as the sewers were in their existing condition when taken over by the defendants' predecessors from the guardians, and as they had not themselves done anything to create a nuisance, they were not liable. It was held that a riparian owner on the banks of a natural stream is, whether owner or not of the river bed, entitled to the flow of the stream past his land in its natural state of purity; that the part of the river in question being only influenced by exceptional tides was not tidal; that the injury, being of a continuing nature, was injurious to the reversion (see also as to reversioners suing, White v. London General Omnibus Co., p. 173, post; that any one who turns fæcal matter, or allows such matter collected by him or under his control to escape into a river under such conditions that it is carried by the wind or current on to his neighbour's land is guilty of trespass; that the plaintiff's action was a bonâ fide complaint of a private injury, and that inasmuch as by statute and statutory orders the defendant council had succeeded to all "powers duties and liabilities" of the guardians, they were liable to the plaintiff for not disposing of their sewage in the same manner as the guardians would have been; and that, therefore, an injunction must be granted, its operation to be suspended for eighteen months. Reference should be made to this case for the latest discussion of the effect of prescriptive and statutory rights of drainage, and of the true effect of the decision in Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B.

A bill filed in 1868 prayed an injunction to restrain a local board from causing or permitting any sewage to pass into a brook so as to be a nuisance. An answer was put in which did not in terms suggest any doubt as to the jurisdiction. In June, 1871, a motion was made for an injunction, and the court granted an interlocutory injunction in November, 1872. After various proceedings in February, 1889, a supplemental writ was issued by leave of the court, and a statement of claim was delivered asking for an injunction and also damages, including such as had been occasioned by the failure of the local board to comply with the interlocutory injunction. At the trial of the action, in July, 1890, KAY, J., decided that the defendants had practically abated the nuisance to such an extent that it would not be necessary to continue the injunction; but was of opinion that certain moneys ought to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs. Objection was, however, taken that the court had no jurisdiction; that the action and suit were improper; and that the only remedy was by mandamus:—Held, that if the objection might originally have prevailed, the defendants ought not to be allowed to raise it now; and that the case must be dealt with as if they had deliberately waived any objection on this ground:—Held, also, applying the principle that, where there is jurisdiction to grant an injunction, damages may be given in lieu for injury, the injunction would not be continued; but that there must be judgment against the defendants for the moneys found to be due from them at the trial (Warwick and Birmingham Canal Navigation Co. v Burman (1890), 63 L. T. 670).

In Smith v. Smith (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 500, JESSEL, M.R., pointed out that if a nuisance was proved to exist, the court would not hesitate to grant a mandatory injunction. The injunction in such a case was said by NORTH, J., in Taylor v. East Barnet Valley L. B. (1885), 1 T. L. R. 257, to be a matter of course. For the form of injunction, see Att.-Gen. v. Halifax (Mayor, etc. of) (1869), 39 L. J. Ch. 129; North Staff. Rail. Co. v. Tunstall, ante, p. 65, and Lingwood v. Stowmarket Paper Co. (1865), L. R. 1 Eq. 77.

An authority who are required by a Provisional Order (duly confirmed) to construct sewage works approved by the L. G. B., cannot rely on such order and approval as a defence to an action for causing a nuisance (Att.-Gen. v. Dorchester Corporation, p. 65, ante).

As to the admissibility of interrogatories in an action for pollution, see Rose v. Chesham U. D. C. (1913), 134 L. T. Jo. 591.

Discharge of sewage into the sea.

There is no common law right to discharge sewage into the sea, and a person whose oyster beds are injured by pollution can maintain an action (Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation (1906), 75 L. J. K. B. 705; 70 J. P. 192; Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., [1906] 1 K. B. 648; 70 J. P. 233; Owen v. Faversham Corporation (1908), 73 J. P. 33; Price's Patent Candle Co., Ltd. v. London C. C., p. 63, ante). See also. the P. H. A., 1907, s. 12, post.

Enforcement of injunction.

With regard to enforcing an injunction reference may be made to Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Birmingham (1871), 24 L. T. 224. There the information was filed nine months before the hearing, but up to the hearing no steps had been taken to abate the nuisance. Under the circumstances the court refused to suspend the injunction for more than six months, with liberty for the defendants to apply for an extension if they could show that they had used due diligence in the meantime. An injunction was suspended for nearly a year in Att.-Gen. v. Willesden U. D. C. (1896), 12 T. L. R. 528.

Note to Section 17.

In Spokes v. Banbury L. B. (1865), L. R. 1 Eq. 42; 30 J. P. 54, an injunction was granted to restrain the pollution of a stream, and was suspended from March 6th to July 1st. The defendants did not obey, alleging that they had not yet discovered means of deodorising the sewage, and that compliance was practically impossible without stopping the drainage of the town. It was held that there had been gross and wilful contempt, and a sequestration was ordered to issue, which order was affirmed on appeal (13 L. T. 453). A motion for a sequestration against a local board will be granted of course, but not an application to commit the members personally (Sutton v. Barnet L. B., W. N. (1877), p. 167; and see Att.-Gen. v. Walthamstow, W. N. (1878), p. 90). An injunction to restrain the defendants from polluting a stream was granted in January, 1885, with a suspension for three months which the court in April refused to extend; on motion by the plaintiff, under R. S. C., Order XLII., r. 31, for sequestration, it was held that Order XLI., r. 5, requiring service of a copy of the order, etc., did not apply; and that notwithstanding Order XLIII., r. 16, the plaintiff was proceeding regularly in applying for leave to issue sequestration (Selous v. Croydon L. B. (1885), 53 L. T. 209). It was said in one case that there might be a wilful default within the meaning of Order XLII., r. 31, though there had not been an obstinate refusal to obey the order (Att.-Gen. v. Walthamstow L. B. (1895), 11 T. L. R. 533). But in a later case it was laid down that where the court is satisfied that the disobedience is not intentional or reckless, but merely casual or accidental and committed under circumstances which negative any suggestion of contumacy, while it may visit the offending party with costs, and may order an inquiry as to damages, it will not take the extreme course of issuing an order either of commitment or of sequestration. To justify so serious a proceeding the court must be satisfied that a contempt of court has been committed—in other words, that its order has been contumaciously disregarded (Fairclough v. Manchester Ship Canal Co., W. N. (1897), p. 7). Cf. also Marsden & Sons, Ltd. v. Old Silkstone Collieries, Ltd. (1914), 78 J. P. N. 220; 13 L. G. R. 342, and Aberdonia Cars, Ltd. v. Brown, Hughes and Strachan, Ltd., W. N. (1915), p. 254; 59 S. J. 598; and see also Rantzen v. Rothschild (1865), 30 J. P. 85; 13 L. T. 399, and Stancomb v. Trowbridge U. D. C., [1910] 2 Ch. 190; 74 J. P. 210, as to the responsibility of a local authority in such cases for acts done by their servants through carelessness, or in actual dereliction of duty.

An action was brought against an authority to restrain them from polluting a stream, and in July, 1901, a perpetual injunction was granted. In July, 1902, the plaintiff moved for liberty to sue out a writ of sequestration for an alleged contempt in wilfully disobeying the injunction. On the hearing of the motion an engineer was directed to report as to what, if anything, ought to be done to deal efficiently with the sewage. He reported in November, 1902, and the plaintiff thereupon submitted that the report showed that the defendants were in contempt. An order for sequestration was made, but the writ was ordered to lie in the office for six months on the defendants undertaking to carry out the works recommended in the engineer's report, and the defendants were ordered to pay the costs of and incidental to the motion, including the plaintiff's expert's fee and the engineer's fees for his report and supervision (Lee v. Aylesbury U. D. C. (1902), 19 T. L. R. 106). See also Lord Gifford v. Chichester Corporation (1902), 24 M. C. C. 252; (1903), 25 M. C. C. 453; Earp v. Brownhills U. D. C. (1913), Times, March 14th.

For cases where the time has been extended, see Wood v. Harrogate (Commissioners of), W. N. (1874), p. 225; Taylor v. Friern Barnet L. B., W. N. (1885), p. 7; Att.-Gen. v. Finchley L. B. (1887), 3 T. L. R. 356.

Jurisdiction of county court.

An injunction to restrain a nuisance may be granted by a county court in an action within its jurisdiction, and may be enforced by attachment (Martin v. Bannister (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 491; and see Richards v. Cullerne (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 623).

Further, county courts have jurisdiction for offences under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, see s. 10, post, and see also West Riding of Yorks. Rivers Board v. Linthwaite U. D. C., [1915] 2 K. B. 436; 79 J. P. 280.

Injunction where nuisance abated before trial.

If between the issue of the writ and the trial, the defendants cease to commit the nuisance, an injunction will not ordinarily be granted, but the court has discretion to grant one (Chester (Dean and Chapter) v. Smelting Corporation, Ltd. (1901), 85 L. T. 67; Carr & Co. v. Bath Gas Light and Coke Co., [1900] W. N. 265). See also

Note to Section 17.

Att.-Gen. v. Squires & Sons (1906), 70 J. P. N. 545; Att.-Gen. v. Keymer Brick Co. (1903), 67 J. P. 434; 1 L. G. R. 654, and Great Central Rail. Co. v. Doncaster R. D. C. (1918), 82 J. P. 33; 15 L. G. R. 813, and cf. p. 208, post.

When an injunction has been granted, but works are promptly carried out for the effectual prevention of the nuisance complained of, and are satisfactorily completed before an appeal from the original decision comes on, the appellate court, though agreeing with the decision, will generally accept an undertaking by the defendants and discharge the injunction (cf. Price's Candle Co., Ltd. v. London C. C. (1911), 75 J. P. 329; 9 L. G. R. 660); but the undertaking should be an unqualified one, and not merely "to use their best endeavours" to prevent, etc. (Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, etc. Drainage Board, [1912] A. C. 788; 76 J. P. 481).

Liability for predecessors.

As to the liability of a local board in respect of a decree against their predecessors, see Att.-Gen. v. Mayor, etc. of Birmingham, p. 62, ante; Taylor v. Friern Barnet L. B., supra, and note (b) to s. 12, p. 44, ante.

Liability to indictment.

"When statutory powers are conferred under circumstances in which they may be exercised with a result not causing any nuisance, and new and unforeseen circumstances arise which render the exercise of them impossible without causing one, and so contravening the law of the land, the persons exercising them are liable to indictment" (per COCKBURN, C.J., in R. v. Bradford Navigation Co. (1865), 6 B. & S., at p. 648). This principle would seem to be applicable to cases, like some of those already mentioned, where power is given by local Acts to drain into a public river and a nuisance afterwards results from the altered circumstances of the district or new or more extensive operations or manufacture carried on therein.

With reference to the pollution of streams by sewage, see also the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts, 1876 and 1893, and the Alkali, etc. Works Regulation Act, 1906, in App. I., post, Vol. II.

Diversion of underground water.

The cases already cited in this note have reference to complaints made against a local authority for polluting streams, and thus interfering with the rights of persons or the public. In other cases questions have arisen as to the right of an authority to intercept the supply of water, questions such as have been the subject of discussion in all times, namely, as to the rights of individuals in running streams, pools, or ponds. A full discussion of the law applicable to these rights cannot be entered upon here. A sanitary authority have sometimes been placed in the position of a private individual disputing as to his right to enjoy or to divert a flowing stream, to intercept it for irrigation or other purposes, as or as against a riparian owner, to pollute or prevent the pollution of the water, or lastly to drain or restrain the drainage of underground or percolating streams. In one important case which was taken from the Court of Exchequer to the Exchequer Chamber, and ultimately to the House of Lords, the right of a local board to drain by means of their wells the underground water from the soil of a neighbouring landowner was established (Chasemore v. Richards (1857), 7 H. L. Cas. 349). In the elaborate judgments pronounced by CRESSWELL, J., and COLERIDGE, J., who dissented from the rest of the court, will be found an elegant exposition of much of the legal doctrine applicable to this important subject of property. The decision has been followed in New River Co. v. Johnson (1860), 29 L. J. M. C. 93; 24 J. P. 244; R. v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1863), 3 B. & S. 710; Ewart v. Belfast Poor Law Guardians (1881), 9 L. R. Ir. 172; and Black v. Ballymena (1886), 17 L. R. Ir. 459. See also Bradford (Mayor of) v. Pickles, [1895] A. C. 587; 60 J. P. 3; McNab v. Robertson, [1897] A. C. 129; 61 J. P. 468; Mostyn v. Atherton, [1899] 2 Ch. 360; Roberts v. Gwyrfai R. D. C., [1899] 2 Ch. 608; 64 J. P. 52; Brain v. Marfell (1880), 44 J. P. 56; 41 L. T. 455; Dudden v. Clutton Union (1857), 1 H. & N. 627; Rawstron v. Taylor (1855), 11 Ex. 369; Bunting v. Hicks (1894), 70 L. T. 455; Re Willard and Eastbourne Waterworks Co. (1899), Times, February 1st; Kibble v. Chipping Norton U. D. C. (1901), Times, February 27th.

An authority may not by an underground drain draw water directly from, and thus diminish the flow of, a surface stream (Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Shugar (1871), L. R. 6 Ch. 483; 35 J. P. 660). If, however, the flow of a surface stream be diminished by a withdrawal of percolating underground water which indirectly affects the stream, no action will lie. A water board were owners of a well and pumping station situated near a natural stream. The well was lined with steel cylinders to a depth of seventy-six feet, and no water from the adjacent soil could get into it above the bottom of the lining. The plaintiff was a riparian owner lower down the stream. The board by pumping water from the well reduced the general level of the water in the surrounding soil, in consequence of which some of the water flowing in the stream leaked out through its bed and sides, and the volume of water in the stream which reached the plaintiff's property was diminished. None of the water which so escaped from the stream ever got into the well. The board was held not liable (English v. Metropolitan Water Board, [1907] 1 K. B. 588; 71 J. P. 313). Nor may an authority interfere with underground water which flows in a defined channel, the existence and course of which are known (Bradford Corporation v. Ferrand (No. 2), [1902] 2 Ch. 655; 67 J. P. 21). If an action be brought to restrain alleged interference with underground water, the court will not give leave to a plaintiff who does not know that such water runs in any known channel, to enter on the defendant's land and search for a defined channel, unless there be primâ facie evidence that there is such a channel (Bradford Corporation v. Ferrand (No. 1) (1902) 67 J. P. 21; 86 L. T. 497).

Where a canal company were empowered by their Act to supply their canal with water from all streams, brooks, and watercourses within one thousand yards of it, it was held that they had no ground of complaint against an authority who, having run a sewer under a road within that distance, made open gratings through which the rain and other surface water fell into the sewer (M. S. & L. Rail. Co. v. Worksop Board of Health, ante, p. 62).

Pollution of underground water.

See also s. 327 (4), and s. 332, post, as to the saving for water rights in this Act. No one has a right to use his own land in such a way as to be a nuisance to his neighbour; and therefore if a man puts filth or other poisonous matter on his land, he must take care that it does not escape so as to poison water which his neighbour has a right to use, although his neighbour may have no property in such water at the time when it is fouled. The plaintiff and defendant were adjoining landowners, and had each a deep well on his own land, the plaintiff's land being at a lower level than the defendant's. The defendant turned sewage into his well, and thus polluted the water that percolated underground from his land to the plaintiff's. Consequently the water which came into the plaintiff's well by percolation when he used his pump became adulterated with the sewage. The Court of Appeal held (reversing PEARSON, J.) that the plaintiff had a right of action against the defendant for so polluting his source of supply, although, until the plaintiff had appropriated it, he had no property in the percolating water under his land, and although he appropriated such water by the artificial means of pumping (Ballard v. Tomlinson (1885), 29 Ch. D. 115; 49 J. P. 692). The decision of PEARSON, J., had previously been dissented from by KAY, J., in Snow v. Whitehead (1884), 27 Ch. D. 588. But an injunction was refused to restrain a defendant from digging a well on the ground that by so doing he might reduce the supply to the plaintiff's well, and injure it by letting in brackish water (Tendring Hundred Waterworks Co. v. Free, Rodwell & Co., Times, July 3rd, 1891).

As to the diversion of water from streams above ground, see notes to s. 51, post, p. 119.

As to the liability for damage caused by interference with the natural course of a stream, see Greenock Corporation v. Caledonian Rail. Co., [1917] A. C. 556; 81 J. P. 269.

Alteration and discontinuance of sewers.

18. Any local authority may from time to time enlarge lessen alter the course of cover in (a) or otherwise improve any sewer belonging to them, and may discontinue close up or destroy any such sewer that has in their opinion become unnecessary, on condition (b) of providing a sewer as effectual for the use of any person who may be deprived in pursuance of this section of the lawful use of any sewer: Provided that the discontinuance closing up or destruction of any sewer shall be so done as not to create a nuisance (c).

A form of notice of intention to alter or discontinue a sewer will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 514.

Note to Section 18.

(a) These words were held to justify the piping of an open watercourse, which the court held to be a "sewer" (Wheatcroft v. Matlock L. B. (1885), 52 L. T. 356; cf. Att.-Gen. v. Hackney L. B., on p. 55, ante).

(b) These words appear to render it necessary for the authority to provide the new sewer in the first place. See Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union; Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B., ante, p. 67. As to the alteration and substitution of sewers by persons other than the authority, see ss. 331, 333, post. As to the duty to adapt or provide private drains when the public sewer is changed, see Marylebone Vestry v. Viret, and St. Martin's-in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Ward, in notes to s. 23, post, p. 84. See also Finlinson v. Porter, p. 85, post, as to the right to alter an existing drain in order to suit the depth of the new sewer.

(c) In terms this proviso is limited to the discontinuance, closing up, or destruction of a sewer, and does not extend to its alteration; but see the next section. It would enable persons interested to apply to the Chancery Division for an injunction to stop works, while the authority could be indicted for any nuisance caused by their proceedings, if it were a public one. See R. v. Bradford Navigation Co. (1865), 29 J. P. 613; 6 B. & S. 631, 648.

19. Every local authority shall cause the sewers belonging to them to be constructed covered ventilated and kept so as not to be a nuisance or injurious to health, and to be properly cleansed and emptied. Cleansing sewers.

This section deals with the physical construction or condition of a sewer as such; it does not apply to a nuisance caused by a discharge of effluent from a sewer into a river (Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation, [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 69 J. P. 62, as to which, see s. 17, ante, p. 69).

Ventilation.

The word "ventilated" was new. It has been suggested that the erection of a ventilating shaft attached to a private house is within the power of a local authority, having regard to the use of this term and the language of the Lords Justices in Swanston v. Twickenham L. B. (1879), 11 Ch. D. 838; 43 J. P. 380.

Remedy for failure to perform duty.

The duty imposed upon an authority by this section, unlike that created by s. 15, is not one in respect of which complaint may be made to the M. of H. under s. 299, post. An action for damages will therefore lie against an authority at the suit of an individual whose property has been injured by their negligent failure to perform such duty (Baron v. Portslade-by-Sea U. D. C., [1900] 2 Q. B. 588; 64 J. P. 675). It might have been otherwise had a penalty been imposed by the Act for default in the performance of the duty, as in Saunders v. Holborn District Board, [1895] 1 Q. B. 64; 59 J. P. 453; or St. Olave's District Board v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. (1896), 18 M. C. C. 60.

The following cases may be referred to as examples of actions against local authorities for negligent breach of the duty imposed by this section. A sewer was so constructed that there was from time to time an overflow of sewage round a manhole, and on one occasion, not in time of flood, the overflow was so great that a large pool of sewage formed in a neighbouring field, the water in the plaintiff's well was contaminated, great discomfort to him was caused, several members of his family became ill, and ultimately he was obliged to leave his house, though he continued liable to pay rent for it. At the trial before RUSSELL, L.C.J., the plaintiff obtained damages for all these causes of complaint (Touzeau v. Slough U. D. C. (1896), 60 J. P. 103). Damages were also recovered for negligent construction in Whitfield v. Bishop Auckland U. D. C., p. 55, ante. An action under Lord Campbell's Act was brought on behalf of the widow and children of a man who had died of blood poisoning from sewer gas. The action was founded upon the negligence of the defendants in allowing a ventilation pipe from their sewer to communicate with the inside of the house. At the trial before COLLINS, J., the jury found for the plaintiffs (Smith v. King's Norton U. D. C. (1896), 60 J. P. 520). The decision in Dent v. Bournemouth (Mayor, etc. of), ante, p. 54, may have been based on the ground that the alleged cause of action amounted to a default to perform the duty imposed by this section. An action was brought against the defendants for negligently and improperly altering certain sewers near to the plaintiff's premises, thereby causing him serious illness. It was alleged that the sewer was not properly ventilated and that the plaintiff's illness arose from this defect. At the trial before DAY, J., the plaintiff recovered damages (Brown v. Whickham U. D. C., Times, July 14th, 1898). See also Russell v. Royston U. D. C. (1913), 77 J. P. N. 317. For a case where damages were recovered in respect of injury by sewer gas to men employed in cleansing, see Digby v. East Ham U. D. C. (1896), 13 T. L. R. 11, and on the new trial, Times, May 25th, 1897; and as to claims by workmen under the Workmen's Compensation Act, see Broderick v. London C. C., [1908] 2 K. B. 807; Eke v. Hart-Dyke, [1910] 2 K. B. 677; Finlay v. Tullamore Guardians, [1914] 2 I. R. 233; 48 Ir. L. T. 110. See also upon this subject generally, the cases cited in notes to s. 15, ante, p. 53.

A local authority are, of course, liable for the negligence of their contractors in laying a sewer. See Hardaker v. Idle U. D. C., [1896] 1 Q. B. 335; 60 J. P. 196, and the cases cited in the note to s. 265.

Negligence essential to cause of action.

A plaintiff alleging a breach of the duty imposed by this section must prove negligence. An authority are merely required to use reasonable skill and care to keep the sewers clean, and are only liable to actions at the suit of persons damaged when they have failed to do so (Hammond v. Vestry of St. Pancras (1874), L. R. 9 C. P. 316; 37 J. P. 456). This decision was followed by NORTH, J., in Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works (No. 2) (1887), 37 Ch. D. 272. There it was held that the duty imposed by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 72 (which corresponds to the above section), to keep the sewers so as not to be a nuisance, is not an absolute duty, but only a duty to use all reasonable care and diligence. If, therefore, a drain has by reason of another drain being connected with it, become "a sewer," and, therefore, by the Act vested in the authority, they will not be liable for a nuisance caused thereby, if it is shown that the connection was made illegally without their knowledge, and that before action brought they did not know, and could not by the exercise of reasonable care have discovered, that the drain was a sewer. And see Hart v. St. Marylebone Borough Council (1912), 76 J. P. 257; Craib v. Woolwich Borough Council (1920), 36 T. L. R. 630, and Ogilvie v. Blything Union (Guardians of) (1891) 65 L. T. 338; (1892), 67 L. T. 18, the facts of which are set out in the notes to s. 17, ante, p. 67. In Stretton's Derby Brewery Co. v. Mayor, etc. of Derby, [1894] 1 Ch. 431, the defendants had made a sewer in 1855. The system of drainage then adopted reasonably provided for the district, and for the then probable increase of buildings which would drain into it, and there had been no negligence in constructing or maintaining the sewer or in not providing a new sewer or sewage system. The plaintiffs many years after the making of the sewer erected a brewery abutting on the road and connected the drainage of the brewery cellars with the sewers. In 1891, 1892, and 1893, the cellars were damaged by floodings from the sewer arising from the fact that by reason of the increase in the number of buildings draining into the sewer, when very heavy falls of rain occurred, the sewer was too small to carry off the influx of water, and the pressure forced the sewage through the connections into the plaintiff's cellars. It was held that the defendants were not liable either as strangers and apart from any statutory duty or (there being no evidence of negligence) under the present section of this Act. See further as to this case, the notes to s. 15, ante. The omission to place a flap or penstock at the mouth of a drain leading from a plaintiff's premises to a sewer, was held to be negligence in Ruck v. Williams (1858), 3 H. & N. 308. In Brown v. Sargent (1858), 1 F. & F. 112, ERLE, J., ruled that an authority were not bound to provide sewers capable of withstanding the pressure caused by extraordinary storms: cf. Meek v. Whitechapel Board of Works (1860), 2 F. & F. 144. See also Dixon v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 418; 46 J. P. 4, and Whitehouse v. Birmingham Canal Co. (1857), 27 L. J. Ex. 25, as to opening floodgates to get rid of extraordinary storm water.

Owing to an escape of sewage from a sewer vested in an urban council, the supply of drinking water used by an adjacent hotel became polluted, and an outbreak of typhoid fever occurred. In an action by the proprietor against the council for damages for the pollution of the water supply, the jury found that the pollution was due to negligence on the part of the defendants, and that there was no contributory negligence, and awarded damages. The plaintiff had no proprietary title to the water coming to his hotel through the supply which was so polluted, nor any leave or licence to use the water. It was held that he was entitled to judgment on the findings (Fergusson v. Malvern U. D. C. (1908), 72 J. P. 101). The Court of Appeal inferred from the facts and the findings that the plaintiff was taking water which belonged to the defendants without any right to do so; that the water was collected and polluted on the defendants' land; that the defendants did not know that he was taking such water; and that there was no evidence of any damage to him except that which was brought about by his own act in thus taking the water. They held that, under these circumstances, the plaintiff had not established any breach of duty on the part of the defendants towards him, and entered judgment for the defendants. See 72 J. P. 273. The House of Lords affirmed this decision (73 J. P. 361).

In Lambert v. Lowestoft Corporation, [1901] 1 K. B. 590; 65 J. P. 326, it was held that an action will not lie against an authority whose duty it is under this Act to maintain sewers, for damage occasioned by the subsidence of a highway due to the defective condition of a sewer and of the soil under the highway, unless there is negligence on the part of the authority. See also Boome v. Bromley R. D. C. (1905), 27 M. C. C. 481, where BIGHAM, J., directed a jury that in order to render the council liable it must be shown that in the discharge of their statutory duty they had acted negligently.

In Morris v. Mynyddislwyn U. D. C., [1917] 2 K. B. 309; 81 J. P. 261, ATKIN, J., remarked: "The duty of a local authority under s. 19 is to maintain the sewer as a sewer, i.e., to take care that it conveys the sewage away and does not become a nuisance owing to leakage."

In that case the local authority were sued for damages for negligence by the plaintiff who had sustained personal injuries by falling over a sewer which had been constructed through private gardens and partly above ground by a landlord in consequence of a notice under ss. 23 and 36. The defendants' inspector of nuisances directed the construction, but as in this he was acting outside his authority, it was held that the defendants were not liable for damage occasioned by negligent construction. Further, as the defendants might have constructed the sewer partly above ground there was no breach of statutory duty in leaving the sewer so constructed as the sewer was not a nuisance within the meaning of the section.

See as to evidence of negligence Fleming v. Manchester Corporation (1881), 45 J. P. 423; 44 L. T. 517, overruled in C. A., Times, June 27th, 1882; Hart v. St. Marylebone Borough Council (1912), 76 J. P. 257.

Liability of gas and water undertakers.

In Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. (1856), 11 Ex. 781, the company were held not liable for the bursting of a pipe caused by a frost of extraordinary severity. And see Price v. South Metropolitan Gas Co. (1895), 65 L. J. Q. B. 126, as to a gas pipe fractured by operations of a third party. In Snook v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co., Ltd. (1886), 2 T. L. R. 308, it was held that a company incorporated by statute for the purpose of supplying water were, in the event of water escaping through a fracture in their main, protected from the doctrine established by Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330; and that before damages can be obtained, it must be proved that the company were guilty of negligence which caused the accident. The Court of Appeal have since decided to the same effect in Green v. Chelsea Waterworks Co. (1894), 70 L. T. 547. And see also Att.-Gen. v Cory Bros. & Co., Ltd., [1921] 1 A. C. 521.

See generally as to the obligation to clean out cuts and channels imposed by provisions such as those contained in this Act, Geddis v. Bann Reservoir (Proprietors of) (1878), 3 App. Cas. 430; Bligh v. Rathangan River Drainage District Board, [1898] 2 I. R. 205.

With reference to the foregoing cases, it must however be remembered that a special Act may expressly preserve the undertakers' liability in respect of a nuisance: see Midwood v. Manchester Corporation, [1905] 2 K. B. 597; 69 J. P. 348 (escape of electricity); and Charing Cross, etc. Co. v. London Hydraulic Power Co. (1914), 30 T. L. R. 441 (escape of water under high pressure), where undertakers were held liable as for a nuisance (apart from any question of negligence).

In Goodbody v. Poplar Borough Council (1915), 84 L. J. K. B. 1230; 79 J. P. 218, gas not within the control of the defendants escaped into an electric chamber and caused an explosion, whereby the plaintiff was injured. It was held that the defendants not being responsible for the presence of the gas in the chamber were not liable for negligence. In this case the two last-mentioned cases were distinguished. In the first the electricity and in the second the water was the property of the undertakers, whereas the gas which escaped was not the property of, or under the control of the borough council. For this same reason the principle laid down in Rylands v. Fletcher, supra, had no application.

Liability of individuals.

As to the liability of the occupier of premises for an escape of water into adjoining premises, see Snow v. Whitehead (1884), 27 Ch. D. 588; Sutton v. Chard, W. N. (1886), p. 120; Gill v. Edouin (1894), 71 L. T. 762; Prinsep v. Belgravia Estate, Limited (1895), 98 L. T. Newsp. 590; Gill v. Edouin (1895), 72 L. T. 579; Blake v. Woolf, [1898] 2 Q. B. 426; 62 J. P. 659.

As to the liability of an owner or occupier for the escape of sewage from a defective drain, see Humphries v. Cousins (1877), 2 C. P. D. 239; 41 J. P. 280; Holland v. Lazarus (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 285; 61 J. P. 262.

As to the liability of a local authority for accidents caused by plates or coverings placed on the highway for the protection of or as parts of sewers laid under the highway, see cases cited in the notes to ss. 66 and 144, post, pp. 144, 261.

Map of system of sewerage.

20. An urban authority (a) may, if they think fit, provide a map exhibiting a system of sewerage for effectually draining their district, and any such map shall be kept at their office, and shall at all reasonable times be open to the inspection of the ratepayers of their district.

(a) This power is confined to an urban authority, though it is obtainable by a rural authority by means of an order under s. 276.

The Public Health (Support of Sewers) Act, 1883, s. 3, post, requires all authorities to make a map of all their sanitary works. Under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 39, s. 10, maps or plans of parishes may be made for the purposes of assessment committees.

Power of owners and occupiers within district to drain into sewers of local authority.

21. The owner (a) or occupier of any premises within (b) the district of a local authority shall be entitled to cause his drains (c) to empty into the sewers of that authority on condition (d) of his giving such notice as may be required by that authority of his intention so to do, and of complying with the regulations (d) of that authority in respect of the mode in which the communications between such drains and sewers are to be made, and subject to the control of any person who may be appointed by that authority to superintend the making of such communications.

Any person causing a drain to empty into a sewer of a local authority without complying with the provisions of this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds (e), and the local authority may close any communication between a drain and sewer made in contravention of this section and may recover in a summary manner (e) from the person so offending any expenses incurred by them under this section.

A form of notice for use under this section will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 514. See also Suggested Regulations, at p. 515.

(a) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8.

(b) As to the powers of owners and occupiers without the district, see next section. Apparently when a house outside the district drains into a cesspool within the district, the sewage in such cesspool is not "foreign" sewage, and the overflow pipe may be connected to the sewers of the district under this section. See per COZENS-HARDY, M.R., and FARWELL, L.J., in East Barnet Valley U. D. C. v. Stallard, p. 82, post.

(c) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 24. This section is confined to drains. The P. H. A., 1848, s. 47, included sewers. The application of this section will be limited if s. 38 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied by an Order of the M. of H. By that section "before any drain existing at the commencement of this section and then not communicating with any sewer or the local authority shall be made to communicate with any sewer of the local authority, the local authority may require the same to be laid open for examination by the surveyor, and no such communication shall be made until the surveyor shall certify that such drain may be properly made to communicate with such sewer."

Note to Section 21.

Where there is an existing connection with a sewer the owner is not entitled to break up the surface of a footway vested in the local authority for the purpose of constructing therein an inspection chamber in the drain, but, semble, an inspection chamber might be so put in when a connection is first made (Att.-Gen. v. Ashby (1907), 71 J. P. 387; 97 L. T. 479). An appeal was dismissed by consent upon terms not stated in court: see 72 J. P. 449.

Compliance with regulations.

(d) Hence the notice must be given and the owner must ascertain what are the regulations applicable before he commences to make his communication. The word used is regulations, not byelaws; therefore, the regulations are at the entire discretion of the local authority, but they must relate to the "mode of making" communications, and must not absolutely prohibit communications (Brown v. Dunstable Corporation, p. 68, ante). The regulations contemplated appear to be general regulations, applicable to all cases in the district. See s. 188, post. If s. 38 of the Act of 1907 (see note (c), supra) has been applied to the district, an old drain, as defined in the section, may be required to be laid open for examination, and the section requires as a condition precedent a certificate by the surveyor that it may be properly made to communicate. A person's right under this section to connect his drain with a sewer does not justify him in trespassing on intervening land not owned by him and laying his drain therein; nor can the authority justify doing so in order to bring his drain up to their sewer (Wood v. Ealing Tenants, Ltd., [1907] 2 K. B. 390; 71 J. P. 456; see also note (g) to s. 23, post, p. 85). But some local Acts empower an authority to lay drains in private streets; and apart from such a clause, an authority may be able to assist an owner by laying a new "sewer" across the intervening land under s. 16. In Russell v. Knight (1894), Times, May 9th, the plaintiff, as owner of the soil of a road, brought an action against the owner of adjoining land for trespass in having unlawfully constructed in the soil of the road a drain communicating with a sewer in the road, and having unlawfully caused sewage matter to be passed through the soil of the road and through the drain and sewer. There was also a complaint that the sewage created a nuisance at the outfall of the sewer on the plaintiff's property. The sewer was a brick watercourse which was formed by a common predecessor in title for the purpose of carrying away water that had accumulated in gravel pits. One defence raised was that the sewer was vested in the local authority and not in the plaintiff; but it did not appear that the defendant or his predecessor in title at any time gave notice to the authority of an intention to drain into the sewer. BRUCE, J., held that the sewer was not a sewer made for profit within the meaning of s. 13, ante, p. 45, and was, therefore, vested in the authority, but that the trespass of using the plaintiff's land for the purpose of making a communication with the sewer could not be justified by any of the provisions of the Act, even on the assumption that the sewer was vested in the authority; that the defendant's predecessor in title, not having complied with the provisions of s. 21, would have had no right to empty sewage matter into it; and that, if without leave of the authority the defendant had caused filth to flow so as to create a nuisance on the plaintiff's land, he could not justify by showing that the sewer was vested in the authority. On the last point this case may be compared with Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole (Mayor, etc. of), p. 30, ante, and Graham v. Wroughton, [1901] 2 Ch. 451; 65 J. P. 710, which show that a person, who by causing his drains to empty fæcal matter into an authority's sewer creates a nuisance at the spot where such sewer discharges, cannot (when proceeded against summarily or civilly) justify himself under this section unless he can show that he has fulfilled the conditions prescribed by it. See also Fordom v. Parsons and Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons on p. 51, ante, as to the liabilities of an occupier and an authority respectively.

Right to connect: extent of.

In Waltham Holy Cross U. D. C. v. Lea Conservancy Board (1910), 74 J. P. 253; 103 L. T. 192, a landowner had constructed a system of sewers and sewage works for houses on his estate, and the authority had never taken any part in the management or exercised any control; it was held that the authority could not be convicted of "causing or suffering" the effluent to flow into a river (cf. Thames Conservators v. Gravesend Corporation, on p. 69, ante); but it was apparently assumed that other persons would have a right to connect drains with the sewers (if they could do so without trespassing), since the sewers vested in the authority. See also as to the responsibility for a similar private sewerage system, Titterton v. Kingsbury Collieries, Ltd., on p. 69, ante. As to these cases, however, see Rochford U. D. C. v. Port of London Authority, ibid.

Where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 18, post, is in force, a person entitled to connect a drain with a sewer may require the authority to do the work for him at his expense. The section provides for payment in advance upon an estimate of the cost; and also for agreements as to the enlarging, etc. of drains.

The right of an owner to connect his drain with a sewer has been said to be an absolute right, and not to be affected by the fact that the sewer empties into a watercourse, and that the sending of sewage into it may create an infringement of s. 17, ante, p. 60 (Ainley v. Kirkheaton L. B. (1891), 60 L. J. Ch. 734; 55 J. P. 230; followed in Brown v. Dunstable (Mayor, etc. of), [1899] 2 Ch. 378; 63 J. P. 519). But it was held by a Divisional Court in Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole (Mayor, etc. of), supra, and by BYRNE, J. (and, semble, also by COLLINS, L.J.) in Graham v. Wroughton, supra, that this section confers no right to cause drains carrying fæcal matter to empty into a sewer used by an authority for surface and slop water only. See also Leeds and District Worsted Dyers, etc. Association, Ltd. v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board (1906), 70 J. P. 480, per DARLING, J.; Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, on p. 51, ante, per RIDLEY, J.; Molloy v. Gray, on p. 51, ante; Gibbings v. Hungerford, p. 61, ante; and Harwich Corporation v. Brewster (1901), 17 T. L. R. 274; and see also Wallace v. McCartan, [1917] 1 I. R. 377. To connect new pipes from water-closets to an old drain carrying no fæcal matter into a sewer is in effect to make a fresh connection with the sewer: per BYRNE, J., in Graham v. Wroughton, supra; but, when there is an existing connection for sewage, trifling additions to, or alterations in, the internal arrangements have not that effect: per EADY, J., in East Barnet Valley U. D. C. v. Stallard, p. 82, post.

Upon somewhat similar provisions in the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, s. 61, it was held that where a person had with an authority's consent caused a drain to communicate with a sewer, he might afterwards use the drain to the full extent of its capacity. But where an old drain from premises outside a district had formerly drained into an open sewer, which was subsequently converted into a covered sewer, the authority reconnecting the drain with it when it was covered in, it was held that the owner of the drain could not send an increase of sewage from new houses through the drain into the sewer without permission (Metropolitan Board of Works v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co. (1881), 17 Ch. D. 246). It was held that a district board of works had no power under the same Act, if it approved of the plans and sections of sewers proposed to be constructed by a landowner and branched into the main system, to withhold their sanction in writing to the construction of the same until he should pay them a sum of money to cover their expenses in supervising the work (R. v. Greenwich District Board of Works (1884), 1 C. & E. 236).

It was held by CHARLES, J., in Peebles v. Oswaldtwistle U. D. C., [1897] 1 Q. B., at p. 392, that the right conferred by this section is not limited to drains conveying ordinary sewage only. "It is clear," he said, "from the definition of 'premises' and 'house' (see s. 4, ante, pp. 7, 20), that the owner or occupier of a factory is entitled under s. 21 to connect his premises by a drain with the sewer. But having done so, what may be put into the drain? Is he to be limited to passing into it ordinary sewage only? I think not. In my opinion he may use the drain to its utmost capacity, and pass liquids of all kinds into it, including those coming from his manufacturing processes, provided, indeed, that they are not liquids injurious to health. This would have been preventible by injunction under the nuisance clauses of the Act of 1875 (see especially s. 91), and is now expressly forbidden by the P. H. A., 1890, s. 17." Although the judgment of CHARLES, J., was reversed on other points, it was not reversed so far as regards the foregoing quotation. This was followed by BYRNE, J., who decided that where the owners of buildings have acquired a right to discharge drainage into a public sewer through a connection lawfully made, such right extends to the discharge of trade and manufacturing effluents, and that the provisions of s. 7 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, do not justify an authority in cutting off the connection, even though the discharge of the trade effluent prejudicially affects the disposal of the sewage matter conveyed through the sewer (Eastwood Brothers, Ltd. v. Honley U. D. C., [1900] 1 Ch. 781; 64 J. P. 792). [See a decision upon a local Act making special provision as to the discharge of trade effluent interfering with treatment or utilisation of sewage, Garfield v. Yorkshire Laundries, Ltd. (1905), 69 J. P. 411; 3 L. G. R. 1192.] The judgment of BYRNE, J., in Eastwood v. Honley U. D. C. was affirmed on grounds which did not necessitate a decision as to the right of a manufacturer to send trade effluent into a sewer, because the authority had already allowed the effluent to be introduced into their sewer, and the only questions were whether the sewer had become insufficient and whether the provisoes following the first part of s. 7 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, applied (Eastwood Brothers, Ltd. v. Honley U. D. C., [1901] 1 Ch. 645). In Brook v. Meltham U. D. C., [1908] 2 K. B. 780; 72 J. P. 409, the Lords Justices expressed disapproval of the decision of CHARLES, J., supra; and see the observations of Lord MACNAGHTEN in Butterworth v. West Riding Rivers Board, [1909] A. C. 45; 73 J. P. 89. In Liverpool Corporation v. H. Coghill & Son, Ltd., [1918] 1 Ch. 307; 82 J. P. 129, it was held that no prescriptive right to discharge into the plaintiff's sewers had been acquired where such discharge had been secret and unknown and unsuspected by the plaintiffs or their predecessors. See also the notes under s. 7 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, in App. I., post, Vol. II. It was in 1903 apparently the view of the law officers that the last-mentioned section is the only one under which a manufacturer can claim to drain his trade effluents into an existing sewer, s. 21, supra, having no application, in their opinion, to trade effluents (see Third Report of Royal Commission on Sewage Disposal, at pp. xi. and xii.). Reference must also be made to the P. H. A., 1890, for, in districts where ss. 16, 17 (see post) are in operation, it is an offence to send into a sewer any injurious matter, chemical refuse, steam, etc., so as to impede the sewer or cause a nuisance.

If the authority once authorise or permit drains to be made into their sewer they cannot afterwards stop them up (Clegg v. Castleford L. B., W. N. (1874), p. 229; Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking Union, ante, p. 67; Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B., ante, p. 67; Ogilvie v. Blything Union, ante, p. 67; Att.-Gen. v. Clerkenwell Vestry, ante, p. 68; Ainley v. Kirkheaton L. B., ante, p. 60; Kirkheaton L. B. v. Ainley, [1892] 2 Q. B. 274; 57 J. P. 36; Brown v. Dunstable (Mayor, etc. of), ante, p. 68; Eastwood Brothers, Ltd. v. Honley U. D. C., supra; Harrington (Earl of) v. Derby Corporation, ante, p. 69. See, however, Gibbings v. Hungerford and Wallace v. M'Gartan, on p. 61, ante. In East Barnet Valley U. D. C. v. Stallard, p. 82, post, SWINFEN EADY, J., and apparently COZENS-HARDY, M.R., regarded these decisions as applicable to s. 22 as well as s. 21).

(e) Section 251, post, provides for the recovery both of the penalty and expenses. As a penalty is in the nature of a punishment for an offence, it is recoverable on information. The procedure, therefore, differs from that for the recovery of expenses which are recoverable upon complaints, and are civil debts within ss. 6 and 35 of the S. J. A., 1879. This distinction did not exist at the time of the passing of the Act; the procedure was then the same in both cases. If, therefore, the penalty is proceeded for, the proceedings must be begun by information; if the expenses, by complaint under the sections just mentioned. The expenses referred to are the expenses of the closing only. It is to be presumed that if the works have occasioned damage to the sewer, the authority can maintain an action in respect of such damage; and, moreover, that they may obtain an injunction to stay the works of any person before completion, so as to prevent damage which the penalty would be inadequate to repair. Recovery of penalty and expenses.

22. The owner (a) or occupier of any premises without the district of a local authority may cause any sewer (b) or drain from such premises Use of sewers by owners and occupiers

Section 22. to communicate with any sewer of the local authority on such terms and conditions (c) as may be agreed on between such owner or occupier and such local authority, or as in case of dispute may be settled, at the option of the owner or occupier (d), by a court of summary jurisdiction or by arbitration in manner provided by this Act (e).

Forms of agreement for use under this section will be found in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at pp. 517, 524.

(a) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8.

Communication by "sewer."

(b) The previous section was confined to a drain, but here the term sewer has been introduced, because a more extended easement than that of a drain may be required in respect of premises without the district. The sewer may have to be continued for some distance.

Terms and conditions.

(c) A dwelling-house just outside the B. district drained into a cesspool, from which an overflow drain ran into a pond; both cesspool and pond were within the district. The lodge, which was also within the district, was drained by a pipe running into the overflow drain between the cesspool and pond. The pond becoming a nuisance, the owner, at the instance of the B. council, connected the overflow drain with a storm-water drain in the district. Later, the council without consulting the owner connected such storm-water sewer with a soil sewer; and, later still, again without consulting him, connected the overflow drain direct with an extension of the soil sewer. The council now called on the owner to agree terms under s. 22 for a continuance of this connection or to provide other means for disposing of his sewage, and claimed an injunction to restrain him from allowing sewage from the house to enter their sewers till terms were agreed. It was held that, the connection having been already made, the claim failed (East Barnet Valley U. D. C. v. Stallard, [1909] 2 Ch. 555; 74 J. P. 9). See also s. 28, post, p. 91, as to agreements between authorities for the communication of sewers with the sewers of the adjoining districts. The distinction between the two sections lies in the method of communication with the receiving authority's sewer. When this is direct, without the use of a sewer belonging to the outside authority, owners and occupiers may avail themselves of the powers of s. 22. Where, however, the sewage is to pass through a sewer belonging to the outside authority before entering the sewer of the receiving authority, procedure must be under s. 28. It may be suggested that if a communication were wrongfully made so as to cause damage, an action for trespass would probably lie. An injunction would probably be granted even if there were no damage beyond the fact that the communication had been made without compliance with the conditions of the local authority. Under the corresponding section of the Act of 1848, the owner of land adjoining a district agreed by deed with the local board to do certain works and pay £10 a year; and the board agreed to give him leave to drain through their drain all sewage from the property and houses then belonging to him, and from any houses thereafter to be erected on his property. Many more houses were afterwards erected and the board's successors were, under a new Act, prevented from passing their sewage into the Thames as formerly. It was held that the deed was not ultra vires, and that the board could bind their successors as to the sewage of houses not then in existence; and further, that though the board were trustees for the ratepayers, they had exercised their discretion, and the agreement did not appear at the time improvident, and its turning out badly for them did not affect it. It was held also, that the law being altered so as to prevent the discharge of sewage into the Thames was no ground for setting aside the deed (New Windsor (Mayor, etc. of) v. Stovell (1884), 27 Ch. D. 665). See other instances in which contracts of a corporate body tying its hands at a future time were held to be valid (Att.-Gen. v. Mayor of Hastings (1902), 67 J. P. 165; 1 L. G. R. 41; and Municipal, etc. Insurance, Ltd. v. Pontefract Corporation (1917), 15 L. G. R. 299; 116 L. T. 671; and cf. Stourcliffe Estate Co. v. Bournemouth Corporation, in notes to s. 164, post, p. 370). It was held that a metropolitan vestry could not enter into a binding agreement to receive sewage into its sewers from a district outside the metropolitan area (St. Mary, Islington (Vestry of) v. Hornsey U. D. C., [1900] 1 Ch. 695). (An appeal to the House of Lords was adjourned sine die for the parties to agree to an arrangement. See note (b) to s. 28, at p. 92.) The language used in the above section hardly seems to authorise the council of a district outside the metropolis to receive sewage from houses within the metropolitan area.

It may be noted that there is no provision under which owners or occupiers who have made themselves liable for payments under agreements with neighbouring councils, can be exempted from contributing (in rates) to the cost of sewerage in their own district (unless possibly under s. 211 (4) or s. 224), or can transfer their liability to the council of their district. This has led to hardship in some cases. There are cases in which the outside owner and the local authority are one and the same, as in the case of a local authority acquiring and laying out a housing estate just beyond the boundary of their district. In such a case the necessary communication can be made without any formalities.

(d) Compare the provisions of s. 181, post. When a dispute arises, if the owner or occupier do not exercise the option at once, the authority may propose one alternative, and if it be not rejected, and the alternative selected, within a reasonable time, it will probably be best for them to proceed in the court, as proceedings there can be more readily supported than would be the case in an arbitration.

(e) An owner of land proposed to lay out some of it for building, and gave notice to the authority of an adjoining district of his intention to connect his proposed sewer with their sewer. The authority objected, and stated that if he insisted on arbitration, they would appoint an arbitrator under protest, and raise their objection at every stage of the proceedings. He thereupon commenced an action claiming a declaration of his right to connect. It was held that although there is jurisdiction to make a declaratory judgment under Order XXV., r. 5, this jurisdiction must be exercised with caution, and that as the proposed sewer had not yet been constructed, and no houses yet built, it was undesirable to make a general declaration as to future rights, which might hamper an arbitrator or court of summary jurisdiction (Faber v. Gosforth U. D. C. (1903), 67 J. P. 197 ; 88 L. T. 549).

Power of local authority to enforce drainage of undrained houses.

23. Where any house (a) within the district of a local authority is without a drain sufficient for effectual drainage (b), the local authority shall by written notice (c) require the owner (d) or occupier of such house, within a reasonable time therein specified, to make a covered drain or drains emptying into any sewer which the local authority are entitled to use, and which is not more than one hundred feet from the site of such house (e) ; but if no such means of drainage are within that distance, then emptying into such covered cesspool or other place not being under any house as the local authority direct (f) ; and the local authority may require any such drain or drains to be of such materials and size (g), and to be laid at such level (h), and with such fall as on the report of their surveyor may appear to them to be necessary.

If such notice is not complied with, the local authority may, after the expiration of the time specified in the notice, do the work required (i), and may recover in a summary manner (k) the expenses incurred by them in so doing from the owner, or may by order declare the same to be private improvement expenses (l).

Provided (m) that where, in the opinion of the local authority, greater expense would be incurred in causing the drains of two or more houses to empty into an existing sewer pursuant to this section, than in constructing a new sewer and causing such drains to empty therein, the local authority may construct such new sewer, and require the owners or occupiers (n) of such houses to cause their drains to empty therein, and may apportion as they deem just (o) the expenses of the construction of such sewer among the owners of the several houses, and recover in a summary manner (k) the sums apportioned from such owners, or may by order declare the same to be private improvement expenses (l).

In connection herewith it should be mentioned that increased powers may be obtained by a local authority if ss. 36, 37 and 49 of the P. H. A., 1907, be applied in their district. See this Act set out, post.

(a) For definition, see s. 4, ante, p. 20. It is immaterial when the house was built.

"Sufficiency" of drainage.

(b) The P. H. A., 1848, s. 49, required a report by the surveyor, and made the decision of the local board conclusive. Here no report is required, and the fact of insufficient drainage may be questioned by the owner or occupier. The clause is, however, nearly identical with 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 10. A report by the surveyor would appear to be desirable, and a form of report is set out in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 529.

No power to compel alteration of "sufficient" drains at private cost.

This section is sometimes erroneously regarded as enabling an authority to require an owner to alter his system of drainage, though it may be sufficient in itself, and to justify their requiring an owner to abolish a cesspool, and drain into a sewer. This cannot be done under the section, if the drains are in fact sufficient, even if there is a convenient sewer. Nor, if his drains are sufficient, can they require him to make new drains into a new sewer which they see fit to construct. On these points the decisions under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, ss. 69, 73, appear to be applicable and conclusive. In Marylebone (Vestry of) v. Viret (1865), 19 C. B. (N.S.) 424, a vestry required an occupier to make a new drain. It was held that the vestry were in fact seeking to make a complete new scheme of drainage, and that the occupier was not required to make the new drain or bear the charge thereof. The work was necessary, not because the drain in itself required improvement, in which case the circumstances would have been within s. 73 (which corresponds to this section), but because of the alteration of the sewers which brought the case within s. 69 (corresponding to s. 18 of this Act). See also Att.-Gen. v. Clerkenwell Vestry, [1891] 3 Ch. 527, ante, p. 68; St Martin's-in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Ward, [1897] 1 Q. B. 40; 61 J. P. 19, and Molloy v. Gray (1889), 24 L. R. Ir. 258, ante, p. 51.

Notice.

(c) See as to the authentication and service of this notice, ss. 266, 267, post. For a form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 530. On the corresponding section of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 473, it was held that a notice by an inspector without the direction of the vestry was insufficient, and that expenses incurred on the owner's default in carrying out the requirements of the notice could not be recovered (St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Holmes (1885), 50 J. P. 132). The ground of the decision was that the vestry had to exercise a discretion in each case, and it was not enough for an inspector to act as he pleased, and rely upon their subsequent approval. No doubt the same principle applies to the text. See also Bowyer v. Mather, [1919] 1 K. B. 419; 83 J. P. 53. Compare London C. C. v. Hobbis (1897), 61 J. P. 85; 75 L. T. 687, and cases in notes to s. 36, post, p. 96.

"Owner" or "occupier."

(d) See definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. The authority have an option as to whether they will give notice to the owner or occupier, and will doubtless be guided by their view as to how prompt and effectual action can be best obtained. See s. 306, under which the owner may be empowered to enter when the occupier prevents him.

Where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 18 (3), post, is in operation, the authority may agree with the owner themselves to make the drain.

Drainage into the sea.

(e) There is no reference to the sea as in the former Act, since it is not desirable to contemplate the pollution of the sea-shore; but the latter part of the clause would cover drainage into the sea when practicable without injurious effects. See hereon, cases cited on p. 71, ante, and s. 12 of the P. H. A., 1907, post.

Distance from site, how measured.

Apparently the measurement must be taken not from the boundary of the curtilage, but from the house or some domestic office occupied with it. An authority served on an owner a notice under this section and a notice under s. 36, post, requiring him to provide a sufficient water-closet for the house. The sewer indicated in the first notice ran through gardens at the back belonging to the same owner, but let by him on leases which gave him no right to enter and lay a drain. The sewer was 120 feet from the back of the house, 98 feet from a detached building used as a washhouse or kitchen, and 30 feet from the curtilage wall, against which was erected a privy. The owner disregarded the notices; and the authority entered, converted the privy into a water-closet, and laid a drain from it across the gardens to the sewer. It was held that the notice under s. 36 was a good notice; and that, as the washhouse and privy were within 100 feet of the sewer, and as the owner had not shown that his tenants would not allow him to enter the gardens and lay a drain, the authority were entitled to recover the cost of the work (Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation (1912), 76 J. P. 365; 10 L. G. R. 710). See also Blashill v. Chambers (1884), 14 Q. B. D. 479; 49 J. P. 388; and Wright v. Wallasey L. B. (1887), 18 Q. B. D. 783. In the absence of express provision, or something in the context to the contrary, distance in an Act of Parliament must be measured in a straight line on a horizontal plane, or in common parlance, as the crow flies. See Mouflet v. Cole (1872), L. R. 8 Ex. 32, as to Acts passed before the Interpretation Act, 1889, and s. 34 of that Act as to later Acts.

(f) This does not necessarily mean into an existing covered cesspool. If there be no such cesspool the local authority may require the owner to construct one as in fact he can be required so to do for a new house under s. 25 (post, p. 86) (Chelmsford Corporation v. Bradridge, [1916] 2 K. B. 38; 80 J. P. 318).

Materials and size of drain.

(g) It appears from Austin v. Vestry of Lambeth (1840), 4 Jur. (N.S.) 274, that it is for an authority to decide whether their directions are complied with in regard to the materials to be used. A vestry ordered a drain to be made with pipes of stoneware of the best kind and quality, but the builder laid down Aylesford pipes, and the vestry declared that these were not stoneware and proceeded to remove them. STUART, V.-C., held that it was for them to determine the question, and refused an interlocutory injunction. His decision was confirmed (27 L. J. Ch. 388, 392); and the bill was afterwards dismissed with costs, the vestry not having acted capriciously or vexatiously (4 Jur. (N.S.) 1032). The authority must also determine the size of the drain. See Woodward v. Cotton (1834), 3 L. J. Ex. 300.

Difficulties with adjoining owners.

If in any particular case difficulty arises by reason of the owner not having a right to carry his drain through his neighbour's or his own tenant's land, the authority may be able to obviate it by means of the powers conferred upon them. For example, if the house to be drained is within 100 feet of a sewer, but the intervening land belongs to another person, the owner of the house would not by receiving the notice be entitled to make his drain through the intervening land, for the notice does not enable him to commit a trespass. See Russell v. Knight and Wood v. Ealing Tenants, cited in the notes to s. 21, ante, p. 79; Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation, supra; Arlidge v. Islington Borough Council, in note to s. 90, post, p. 164; and Scarborough (Mayor of) v. Scarborough R. S. A. (1876), 1 Ex. D. 344, a case of a notice under s. 94 to abate a nuisance on another person's land. But the authority might, if the connection could be effected by laying a new length of sewer, lawfully proceed under s. 16, making compensation under s. 308 to the person whose land was interfered with. In Finlinson v. Porter (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 188; 39 J. P. 661, the defendant had conveyed certain land to the plaintiff subject to the joint ownership, and right to the use by the defendant, of a drain running through the land conveyed, together with the right of entering and repairing the drain or replacing pipes in it. The drain discharged into a sewer, which was afterwards removed by the local board, who constructed another at a lower depth. The defendant thereupon lowered the drain and put in fresh pipes in order to adapt it to the new sewer, and it was held that he was entitled to do so, whether his right under the deed was to be regarded as that of a tenant in common of the drain, or as an easement only. But the burden of such an easement must not be increased. See Watson v. Troughton (1882), 47 J. P. 518.

Level of drain.

(h) The drain or sewer might be laid either partly in and partly above ground, or entirely above ground as the local authority might direct (Morris v. Mynyddislwyn U. D. C., [1917] 2 K. B. 309; 81 J. P. 261). See p. 77, ante.

Right of authority to execute work.

(i) "The conditions prescribed by this section as a preliminary to the sanitary body taking the work out of the hands of the owner have regard solely to his rights. They are designed to control the action of the board as against him and not to limit their capacity to do the work. It is not permitted to them arbitrarily to interfere and do the work at the owner's expense without first giving him an opportunity of doing it himself. But if they were to do so, he is the only person who could complain. The Act requires that the work shall be done by the one party or the other, and the owner may waive the option given him by the Act if he pleases, and agree with the urban authority that the drain shall be made by them as if the preliminaries had been observed" (per LUSH, J., in Hall v. Corporation of Batley (1877), 47 L. J. Q. B. 148; 42 J. P. 151). And see the P. H. A., 1890, s. 18 (3), referred to in note (d), supra.

Recovery of expenses.

(k) See as to the recovery of these expenses, s. 251, post, and note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 81. The defendant may, of course, dispute the validity of the original notice on such grounds as that his drain was sufficient or the sewer too far off. As to the incidence of the expenses as between a tenant for life and remainderman, vendor and purchaser, landlord and tenant, etc., see Re Barney, Harrison v. Barney, [1894] 3 Ch. 562, and other cases in the notes to s. 104.

Construction of new sewer.

(m) This provision applies where an authority consider that it will be cheaper for the owners to bear the cost of a new length of sewer and short connecting drains, than to have to make a long drain for each house to the sewer as it exists. Note that the provision differs from that in the Acts relating to the metropolis, as to which see Bateman v. Poplar District Board of Works (1886), 33 Ch. D. 360, and other cases on pp. 32, 33, as to drainage by "combined operation."

(n) See note (d), ante. A form of notice will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 531.

Finality of apportionment.

(o) See s. 257 as to the method of disputing an apportionment of expenses, and s. 268 as to an appeal to the M. of H. against a "notice" of decision.

Power of local authority to require houses to be drained into new sewers.

24. Where (a) any house within the district of a local authority has a drain communicating with any sewer, which drain though sufficient for the effectual drainage of the house is not adapted to the general sewerage system of the district, or is in the opinion of the local authority otherwise objectionable (b), the local authority may, on condition (c) of providing a drain or drains as effectual for the drainage of the house, and communicating with such other sewer as they think fit, close such first-mentioned drain, and may do any works necessary for that purpose, and the expenses of those works, and of the construction of any drain or drains provided by them under this section, shall be deemed to be expenses properly incurred by them in the execution of this Act (d).

A form of notice of intention to proceed under this section is given in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 533.

Object of section.

(a) This provision applies to houses built before the authority established their own sewers, as otherwise the proper communication would have been made. It also applies where a sewer is reconstructed or replaced by a new sewer. The authority cannot escape liability under it by requiring the owner to provide new drains under colour of s. 23, ante. See St. Martin's-in-the-Fields (Vestry of) v. Ward and other cases, on p. 84, ante.

(b) See s. 41, post, p. 105, for the procedure where a drain is a nuisance or injurious to health.

(c) The provision is to be made before the previous drain is closed.

Incidence of cost.

(d) And therefore payable according to s. 207 or s. 229 as the case may be; they are not to be charged to the owners or occupiers. The M. of H. permit these drains and their junctions to be included in estimates upon which loans are sanctioned, regarding the drains as branch sewers.

Penalty on building house with-

25. It shall not be lawful in any urban district (a) newly to erect any house or to rebuild any house which has been pulled down to or below the ground floor (b), or to occupy any house so newly erected or rebuilt, unless and until (bb) a covered drain or drains be constructed, of such size and materials, and at such level, and with such fall as on the report of the surveyor (c) may appear to the urban authority to be necessary for the effectual drainage of such house (d); and the drain or drains so to be constructed shall empty into any sewer which the urban authority are entitled to use, and which is within one hundred feet of some part of the site (e) of the house to be built or rebuilt; but if no such means of drainage are within that distance, then shall empty into such covered cesspool or other place, not being under any house, as the urban authority direct.

Section 25.

Drains in urban district.

Any person who causes any house to be erected or rebuilt (f) or any drain to be constructed in contravention of this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds.

In this connection reference should be made to the provisions of ss. 36, 37, and 49 of the P. H. A., 1907, which, if applied in any district, will prevent the use of rain-water pipes as soil pipes and the use of water or stack pipes as ventilating shafts, and will give additional power in connection with the provision of sinks and drains.

Application to rural districts.

(a) Note the restriction. If a rural authority find it desirable that this provision should be in operation, they should apply to the M. of H. to grant them the powers of an urban authority with respect to any particular contributory place or places under s. 276, post.

(b) This constitutes a new building. See s. 159, post, p. 361.

(bb) Semble, the words "rebuild . . . or occupy . . . unless and until," must be read distributively, so that the drain need not be made before rebuilding, so long as it is made as part of the operation and before the house is occupied.

Report.

(c) This must be the surveyor of the urban authority. See s. 189, post, and Lewis v. Weston-super-Mare L. B., and Kendal v. Lewisham Borough Council, ante, p. 57.

Authority's discretion.

(d) Generally the byelaws require plans and specifications of the building and its drainage to be submitted to the authority. These are referred to the surveyor who is to report to the authority. They must then decide as to the sufficiency of the proposed drainage, and give their directions as to the course to be followed. There does not appear to be any appeal against their directions if their discretion has been exercised within the limits of the power conferred by this section. See Matthews v. Strachan, infra. An authority cannot compel a building owner to make a sewer as distinguished from a drain under this section (Clarke v. Paddington Vestry (1859), 5 Jur. (N.S.) 138). In deciding what is "necessary for the effectual drainage" of a new house under this section the council must consider only what is necessary for the particular house as regards the size, material, level and fall of the drains. They cannot take into consideration what is desirable having regard to the disposal of the sewage of the district generally, and upon that ground require separate drains for sewage and surface water (Matthews v. Strachan, [1901] 2 K. B. 540; 65 J. P. 789), but, semble, they might acquire powers in this behalf by bye-laws made under s. 157 (ibid., per RIDLEY, J., [1901] 2 K. B. at p. 548). A builder submitted a plan for a cottage close to the sea, showing a proposed drain from the sink to a cesspool (there being no water-closet). The plan complied with the bye-laws. The surveyor advised the urban authority that, as the proposed drainage was below the level of ordinary spring tides, the cesspool would at such tides become filled with sea water by percolation, and the system rendered inoperative. The authority consequently disapproved the plan on the ground that it would provide no effectual drainage, and that no satisfactory system of drainage had been submitted. It was held that they had no right to refuse their approval to a plan which complied with the byelaws on general grounds outside the merits of the plan itself (R. v. Bexhill Corporation, Ex parte Cornell (1911), 75 J. P. 385; 9 L. G. R. 641).

Note to Section 25.

The authority may require a separate drain for each house though only semi-detached, or forming part of a block constituting only one building (Woodford U. D. C. v. Stark (1902), 66 J. P. 536; 18 T. L. R. 439). In districts where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 18 (3), post, is in force, the authority may agree with the owner to make the drain.

See also the P. H. A., 1907, s. 36, which may be applied to the district of any authority. By it, "no pipe used for the carrying off of rain water from any roof shall be used for the purpose of carrying off the soil or drainage from any privy or water-closet. Any person who shall offend against this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds and to a daily penalty not exceeding forty shillings."

(e) See notes (e) and (f) to s. 23, ante, pp. 84, 85.

(f) There is no penalty imposed upon the occupier. As to the recovery of the penalty, see s. 251, post.

Penalty on unauthorised building over sewers and under streets in urban district.

26. Any person who in any urban district, without the written consent of the urban authority (a)—

(1) Causes any building (b) to be newly erected over any sewer of the urban authority; or,

(2) Causes any vault arch or cellar to be newly built or constructed under the carriageway of any street (c), shall forfeit to the urban authority the sum of five pounds and a further sum of forty shillings for every day during which the offence is continued after written notice in this behalf from the urban authority (d); and the urban authority may cause any building vault arch or cellar erected or constructed in contravention of this section to be altered pulled down or otherwise dealt with as they may think fit (e), and may recover in a summary manner (f) any expenses incurred by them in doing so from the offender.

Form of consent.

(a) There is no special mode of giving this consent, as in the former Act. It may be expressed in a letter from the clerk to the council. The consent ought to be entered on the council's minutes, and a copy of the minute forwarded to the applicant. For a form, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 537. In some cases it will take the form of an agreement: see forms in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at pp. 537, 540.

Effect of section upon contracts for sale of land.

(b) As to what is a building, see note to s. 4, ante, p. 22. The conditions of sale relating to a dwelling-house and grounds, not sold for building purposes, provided inter alia that any error or omission in the particulars of sale affecting the nature of the property should not annul the sale, but should be matter for compensation, and that the property was sold subject to all rights of way and other easements. A deed of mutual covenants, subject to which the property was sold, precluded any building thereon. The purchaser discovered that there was a public sewer passing under the garden at the rear of, and some distance from, the house, and a manhole used for obtaining access to the sewer. The vendor was ignorant of the existence of the sewer. The sewer was vested in the local authority, and no buildings could be erected over it without their sanction. The purchaser objected to complete on the ground that the vendor was unable to make a title to the property. It was held that the circumstance did not justify the court in releasing the purchaser from his contract; the existence of the sewer did not so alter the character of the piece of land that the purchaser could say he did not get what was intended to be sold, and the case was one for compensation (In re Brewer and Hankin's Contract (1899), 80 L. T. 127). This decision was distinguished in a later case where a culverted watercourse was discovered in property sold for building purposes (In re Puckett and Smith's Contract, [1902] 2 Ch. 258). In Pemsel and Wilson v. Tucker, [1907] 2 Ch. 191; 71 J. P. 547, it was held that, owing to the existence of a sewer (vested in the local authority) under part of property, the vendor was unable to convey all that he had contracted to sell; and that he had not made a good title. In Shepherd v. Croft, [1911] 1 Ch. 521, where property was sold primarily, but not solely, for residential purposes, it was held that the existence of a culverted water-course was not so material a defect as to justify the purchaser in refusing to complete upon payment of compensation. Note to Section 26.

Under the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, s. 68, the wording is wider and includes any "building, wall, bridge, fence, obstruction, annoyance or encroachment in, upon, over or under any sewer." Under this section it was held that a stack of timber was an obstruction or encroachment, but on the facts in the case of so trifling a character as to be immaterial (Vigers Bros. v. London C. C., [1919] 1 K. B. 56; 83 J. P. 6).

(c) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 15. This prohibition is introduced here because such vault or cellar might interfere with the course of a sewer hereafter to be made. It refers to the carriageway only, and has no reference to the foot-path. As to the repair of vaults, arches, and cellars under streets in districts where the P. H. A., 1890, has been adopted, see s. 35 of that Act, post. Vaults under roadway of street.

(d) Forfeitures are recovered by process described in s. 251, post. A forfeiture under this section is recoverable as a penalty, for it will be observed that the section speaks of the offence. The proceedings are, therefore, in their nature criminal, and the forfeitures must be recovered on information. See note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 81. The five pounds is recoverable in any case, the forty shillings only after notice. A form of notice for use under this section will be found in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 536. Recovery of forfeiture.

(e) In removing the structure the authority must not interfere with anything not forming part of it, e.g., pipes or wires laid in the subsoil (Walker U. D. C. v. Wigham (1901), 66 J. P. 152; 85 L. T. 579). Removal of structures.

(f) See s. 251, post, and note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 81. These expenses are recoverable on complaint, and constitute a civil debt under the S. J. A., 1879, for although the section speaks of them as recoverable from the offender, they are not in the nature of penalties for the offence, which are provided for by the previous part of the section. Recovery of expenses.

Disposal of Sewage.

27. For the purpose of receiving storing disinfecting distributing or otherwise disposing of sewage any (a) local authority may— Powers for disposing of sewage.

(1) Construct (b) any works within their district, or (subject to the provisions of this Act as to sewage works without the district of the local authority) without (c) their district; and

(2) Contract (d) for the use of purchase or take on lease any land buildings engines materials or apparatus either within or without (c) their district; and

(3) Contract (d) to supply for any period not exceeding twenty-five years (e) any person with sewage and as to the execution and costs of works either within or without (c) their district for the purposes of such supply:

Provided that no nuisance be created in the exercise of any of the powers given by this section (f).

(a) This and the following sections apply to both urban and rural authorities. Extent of section.

(b) The corresponding section in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 46, was held not to enable a local board to enter land without the owner's consent, and make a tank therein for the reception of sewage from a sewer proposed to be made after a report from their surveyor and notice to the owner. Where such a proceeding was proposed an injunction was granted (Sutton v. Mayor of Norwich (1858), 27 L. J. Ch. 739). See also Att.-Gen. v. Metropolitan Board of Works (1863), 9 L. T. 139). While, therefore, an authority have power to make sewers in or through private land (s. 16) without the consent of the owner (paying compensation), they have no such power to make works for the disposal of sewage under that section. An engine-house with pump and machinery, erected partly above and partly below the level of the ground, for lifting and forcing along a rising main the sewage of a district to a common outfall for treatment is a work for "the purpose of receiving or otherwise disposing of sewage," within the meaning of this section, for which the necessary land must be purchased or leased (King's College, Cambridge v. Uxbridge R. D. C., [1901] 2 Ch. 768). For the provisions applicable to the purchase of land, see ss. 175 and 176, post.

Note to Section 27.

Sewage works outside the district.

(c) The P. H. A., 1848, s. 44, used general language in reference to the making of the sewer. Nevertheless, it was held in Haywood v. Lowndes (1859), 28 L. J. Ch. 400, that a local board could not make sewers out of their district. Hence 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98, s. 30, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, ss. 4—7, were passed, the latter of which contains provisions which are now set out in ss. 32—34 of this Act, and apply only to a sewer or other work out of the district.

(d) As to the contracts of urban authorities, see s. 174, post. All contracts with them should be under seal if the value or amount exceeds £50; all contracts with rural authorities should be under seal irrespective of their value.

As to the redemption of tithe rent-charge on a purchase under this section, see 41 & 42 Vict. c. 42, s. 1. On being let into possession, the local authority may raise money on the security of the land and works under s. 235, post.

Terms of supply.

(e) A longer term than was provided in the previous Act (30 & 31 Vict. c. 113, s. 4). Great care is required in framing these contracts. See further, s. 30, post, p. 93, as to the terms of the contract.

A local board leased to a company the sewage works of a town and a plot of land for a term of fourteen years, the company covenanting that they would during the term keep the outfall of the works, with the engines, pumps, and apparatus, in proper working order, so as to admit of the free flow of the sewage through the sewers communicating with the works, and so that the same might not at any time be stopped. To a bill by the local board complaining that the company's works were insufficient to treat the sewage successfully, that they were pumping only a portion of the sewage out of the sewers, and were damming back the residue in the sewers so as to be a nuisance to the inhabitants, and that the plaintiffs were being threatened with proceedings, and praying for an injunction to restrain the defendants from permitting the sewage to remain in the sewers so as to be a nuisance or a damage to the plaintiffs, and from damming back the sewage in the sewers, the defendants demurred on the ground that the court could not superintend the proper performance of the works, that the plaintiffs had alleged no special damage, and that it was not the practice of the court to restrain the infringement of a public right at the suit of a corporation, except at the instance or in the presence of the Attorney-General. The court overruled the demurrer and granted the injunction (Nuneaton L. B. v. General Sewage Co. (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 127). O. agreed to grant to a local board a lease of land for the purpose of an outfall for drainage, and "to allow the use of the land below the level of the said outfall for drainage purposes." O. was to have the benefit of the sewage matter, paying nothing therefor. The board erected a sewage tank with an outlet, but without any works for distributing the sewage over O.'s land. It was held that the agreement did not give the board a right to indiscriminately pour the sewage on the land, and that they must use proper means for distributing it in a manner to benefit the land, and not to injure it for agricultural purposes (Witham L. B. v. Oliver (1884), 1 T. L. R. 60).

Prohibition of nuisance.

(f) See the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, s. 24. This prohibition applies to private as well as public nuisances, and authorities have been restrained from carrying on works of sewerage and drainage highly important with reference to their own district and the sanitary state of it, but causing an injury and a nuisance to the property of individuals. As to how far an authority can be held liable for damage caused by a flow of sewage if they succeed to a defective system of drainage constructed by their predecessors, and simply permit the previous use of the sewers to continue, without doing, themselves, anything actively, see Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth L. B., Att.-Gen. v. Guardians of Dorking, Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., Jones v. Llanrwst U. D. C., in notes to s. 17, pp. 67, 70, 73, ante, and Att.-Gen. v.

Note to Section 27.

Lewes Corporation, on p. 55. Where, however, they make new sewers and connect them with a sewer to which they have succeeded from their predecessors they are liable in damages, for it can under such circumstances be no longer said that there is nonfeasance only. See Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., supra, and Earl of Harrington v. Derby Corporation, cited in the notes to s. 17, p. 69, ante.

A council acquired from P.'s predecessor a site for a sewage farm, and their conveyance gave them "the free right of passage and running of water" from the site through a ditch on land of the vendor, the council using the same so as not to create a nuisance to him or his tenants. In an action by P., and his tenant complaining that the council caused effluent to flow from the farm into the plaintiff's land and ditch and complaining of nuisances by smells, it was held that the fact that the land was sold to be used as a pumping outfall for sewage did not, by operation of an implied grant, preclude the plaintiffs from complaining of the discharge of the effluent, and also that the express grant of the right to discharge water, being limited to the passage and running of water, was not a grant of the right to discharge the effluent (Phillimore v. Watford R. D. C., [1913] 2 Ch. 434; 77 J. P. 453).

There is no right to discharge sewage into the sea without liability for the consequences, and a nuisance caused by such a discharge is embraced in the concluding words of the section. See Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation (1906), 75 L. J. K. B. 305; 70 J. P. 192; Foster v. Warblington U. D. C., p. 71, ante; Owen v. Faversham Corporation (1908), 73 J. P. 33; and Price's Patent Candle Co., Ltd. v. London C. C., p. 63, ante. See also Andrews v. Ramsgate Corporation, 38 M. C. C. 69, Times Newsp., Feb. 24th, 1916, as to liability for damages for nuisance by the pollution of sea water caused by depositing waste chalk on the foreshore.

See Hewinson v. Cheltenham R. D. C., in notes to s. 299, post, for an action in respect of a sewage farm alleged to cause a nuisance, and see also Bainbridge v. Chertsey U. D. C., 79 J. P. 134; 13 L. G. R. 935; and Great Central Rail. v. Doncaster R. D. C., 82 J. P. 33; 15 L. G. R. 813.

Where a nuisance is only temporary and occasional, the court will only interfere by injunction in extreme cases (Att.-Gen. v. Preston (Mayor, etc. of), (1896), 13 T. L. R. 14).

By a Provisional Order, confirmed by Act of Parliament, an authority were required to carry out within a fixed time works for the disposal of the sewage of their district approved by the L. G. B., and in case of default this requirement was made enforceable in manner provided by s. 299. The authority constructed sewage works approved by the L. G. B., but, though constructed without negligence, they created both a public and private nuisance. It was held that the Order was only a direction to the authority to exercise the powers of s. 27 within a given time, and did not exempt them from their obligation under the section not to create a nuisance, and an injunction was granted (Att.-Gen. v. Dorchester Corporation (1906), 70 J. P. 281; 94 L. T. 682).

See also notes to s. 17, ante, p. 60, as to pollution of streams.

Power to agree for communication of sewers with sewers of adjoining district.

28. The local authority of any district may, by agreement (a) with the local authority of any adjoining district, and with the sanction of the Local Government Board, cause their sewers to communicate with the sewers of such last-mentioned authority, in such manner and on such terms and subject to such conditions as may be agreed on between the local authorities, or, in case of dispute, may be settled by the Local Government Board (b): Provided that so far as practicable storm waters shall be prevented from flowing from the sewers of the first-mentioned authority into the sewers of the last-mentioned authority, and that the sewage of other districts or places shall not be permitted by the first-mentioned authority to pass into the sewers so as to be discharged into the sewers of the last-mentioned authority without the consent of such last-mentioned authority.

Note to Section 28.

(a) This should be under seal. The sanction of the M. of H. is not required by the section to the actual agreement. Before entertaining proposals for communication, however, the Ministry consider it desirable that the two authorities concerned should have entered into an agreement for the communication of their sewers, and if possible settling the terms. Before sanctioning the communication the Ministry usually direct a local inquiry or inspection, and give particular attention to the manner in which the receiving authority disposes of its sewage. A form of agreement will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 555.

Form of agreement.

(b) See the further power granted by s. 285, in regard to works which will be for the common benefit of two or more districts. The sanction of the M. of H. is not required to the joint action there authorised.

Effect of agreement.

An agreement provided that the N. local board should make a sewer and allow the sewers of the C. district to drain into it; but the C. local board were not to permit the sewage of any other district or places to pass into their sewers so as to discharge into the sewer to be made by the N. board. Under Acts of Parliament then in existence, the owners of premises beyond the limits of a district had power to make a sewer to communicate with the sewers of the district, and by an Act subsequently passed (Act of 1875, s. 22), similar powers were given. It was held that the provisions of the agreement were overruled by the subsequent Act, and that the N. board could not restrain the C. board and the owners of premises beyond their district from making sewers which would discharge into the sewer of the N. district. It was held also that the agreement must be taken to have been made subject to the provisions of the law then existing, under which the owners of premises beyond the C. district had similar powers (Newington L. B. v. Cottingham L. B. (1879), 12 Ch. D. 725; and see Mayor, etc. of New Windsor v. Stovell, ante, p. 82).

Position apart from agreement.

Where there is no agreement such as that mentioned in the section, it appears from Att.-Gen. v. Acton L. B., ante, p. 67, that notwithstanding the obligation imposed on a local board by the P. H. A., 1875, to drain their district, their right to send the sewage of their district directly or indirectly into the sewers belonging to the authority of an adjoining district is, in the absence of express enactment, no higher than the right of a landowner to send sewage from his land on to the land or into the drains of a neighbouring landowner. See also Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners v. South Dublin Guardians, ante, p. 31. If, therefore, a prescriptive right has been acquired to send some sewage from one district into the sewers of another, the burden cannot be increased without the consent of the authority of the latter district. The ratio decidendi of Metropolitan Board of Works v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co. (1881), 17 Ch. D. 246 (ante, p. 80), applies to an authority just as it does to an ordinary landowner. An injunction was granted in the absence of proof of substantial damage, on the ground that the defendants by their pleading claimed a right to continue doing that which the court held they were not entitled to do. The court granted such injunction as to the future, but refused to grant a mandatory injunction to compel the stopping up of existing drains: (1) because to do so would cause serious inconvenience to the district; and (2) because it is doubtful whether an authority have power to stop up drains which they have once authorised to be connected with their sewers. And inasmuch as the injunction applied only to the future, the court refused to suspend its operation.

Connection with metropolitan sewers.

This section does not enable a district council to procure the connection of its sewers with those of an authority in the metropolis (St. Mary, Islington (Vestry of) v. Hornsey U. D. C., [1900] 1 Ch. 695). On an appeal to the House of Lords the hearing was adjourned sine die for the parties to agree to an arrangement which was effected by an award of Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD, dated March 9th, 1905, to which effect is given by the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1906. See also London C. C. v. Acton U. D. C. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 689.

Power to deal with land appropriated to sewage purposes.

29. Any local authority may deal with any lands held by them for the purpose of receiving storing disinfecting or distributing sewage in such manner as they deem most profitable, either by leasing the same for a period not exceeding twenty-one years for agricultural purposes (a), or by contracting with some person to take the whole or a part of the produce of such land, or by farming such land and disposing of the produce thereof; subject to this restriction, that in dealing with land for any of the above purposes, provision shall be made for effectually disposing of all the sewage brought to such land without creating a nuisance (b). Section 29.

(a) Such a lease granted to a member of an authority will not disqualify him under s. 46 of the L. G. A., 1894, post (R. v. Gaskarth (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 321; 44 J. P. 507; followed in Ireland in Local Government Board v. Eivers, [1902] 2 I. R. 262). The same construction is to be placed on s. 12 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, which relates to contracts with members of borough councils. Member of authority may take a lease.

There is a general provision for leases of the lands of authorities in s. 177.

As to loans on the security of sewage works, see s. 235, post.

As to the rating of a sewage farm worked by the local authority or by a tenant thereof, see Burton-upon-Trent (Mayor, etc. of) v. Burton-upon-Trent Union (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 197; 54 J. P. 453; London C. C. v. Erith Churchwardens, [1893] A. C. 562; 57 J. P. 821; Leicester (Mayor of) v. Beaumont Leys Churchwardens (1894), 63 L. J. M. C. 176; Stourbridge Main Drainage Board v. Seisdon Union (1902), 66 J. P. 372; 86 L. T. 415; Davies v. Seisdon Union, [1908] A. C. 315; 72 J. P. 305; Hall v. Seisdon Union (1913), 77 J. P. 17. Rating of sewage farm.

It is understood that the M. of H. and their technical advisers much prefer that the local authorities should keep sewage lands in their own hands, on the ground that a lessee or tenant is more likely to devote his attention to the production of crops than to the efficient purification of the sewage.

(b) This appears to be a repetition of the proviso to s. 27, ante, p. 89.

30. Where any local authority agree with any person (a) as to the supply of sewage and as to works to be made for the purpose of such supply (b), they may contribute to the expense of carrying into execution by such person all or any of the purposes of such agreement, and may become shareholders (c) in any company with which any agreement in relation to the matters aforesaid has been or may hereafter be entered into by such local authority, or to or in which the benefits and obligations of such agreement may have been or may be transferred or vested. Contribution to works under agreement for supply or distribution of sewage.

(a) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 6.

(b) See s. 27 (3), ante, p. 89. This section contemplates the execution of works by the landowner; under s. 27 (3) the execution may be by either party.

(c) This provision was contained in 30 & 31 Vict. c. 113, s. 15; but the consequences might be so complicated that it is not likely to be often adopted. It is difficult to consider the consequences of a local authority being involved in a winding-up suit. On this subject Buckley on Companies, 7th ed., pp. 8, 90, may be referred to. And see also Royal Bank of India's Case (1869), L. R. 4 Ch. 252, as to the liability of a corporate body in respect of shares in a company.

31. The making of works of distribution and service for the supply of sewage to lands for agricultural purposes shall be deemed an "improvement of land" authorised by the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, and the provisions of that Act shall apply accordingly. Application of the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, to works for supply of sewage.

The provisions of this Act (27 & 28 Vict. c. 114) are too numerous to be set out in this work. It enables owners of limited interests in lands to execute certain improvements (in which by this section sewage works are now included), and to charge the lands with the cost. See also 62 & 63 Vict. c. 46.

Section 32. As to Sewage Works without District.

Notice to be given before commencing sewage works without district.

32. A local authority shall, three months (a) at least before commencing the construction or extension of any sewer or other work for sewage purposes (b) without their district (c), give notice (d) of the intended work by advertisement in one or more of the local newspapers circulated within the district where the work is to be made.

Such notice shall describe the nature of the intended work, and shall state the intended termini thereof, and the names of the parishes, and the turnpike roads and (e) streets, and other lands (if any) through across under or on which the work is to be made and shall name a place where a plan of the intended work is open for inspection at all reasonable hours; and a copy of such notice shall be served (f) on the owners (g) or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees, and occupiers of the said lands, and on the overseers of such parishes, and on the trustees (e), surveyors of highways (h), or other persons having the care of such roads or streets.

"Sewage works": what included.

(b) The plaintiffs had a sewage farm on the banks of a river. The defendants had some sewage works higher up the same stream. The effluent from these works was carried away by a drain, which passed through the plaintiffs' sewage farm, and discharged into a "pool," which communicated with the river by means of a sluice, and, becoming narrower, ultimately formed a backwater into the river. Into this backwater the effluent water from the plaintiffs' sewage farm was discharged. The bottom of the pool being uneven, sewage fungus collected and caused a nuisance. The freeholder commenced proceedings in respect of the nuisance, which were compromised, the defendants agreeing to cleanse the pool and cement the bottom of it. The pool was entirely out of the defendants' district, and partly in the plaintiffs' district. The defendants having commenced their operations without giving any notice under this section, the Court of Appeal held that they were wrong, as the works were "sewage works" within its meaning (Wimbledon L. B. v. Croydon R. S. A. (1886), 32 Ch. D. 421).

(c) The power to construct a sewer without the district is given by s. 16, ante, p. 55. The powers as to other sewage works are contained in s. 27, ante, p. 89.

Powers of authority and practice of the M. of H.

This section applies even where the consent of the authority of the adjoining district has been obtained under s. 285, post (Jones v. Conway and Colwyn Bay Joint Water Supply Board, cited in note (g) to s. 16, ante, p. 60). If, however, two or more authorities are combining under s. 285 for the construction of works of common benefit, the M. of H. hold that notices need not be given unless works are to be constructed in a district outside the jurisdiction of the combining authorities.

When the works beyond the district are of a trifling character and also when it is very desirable to avoid delay, it is sometimes found possible to avoid the giving of notices by arranging with the adjoining authority to carry out the work.

The consent of the owners of the lands traversed will not obviate notices, and they must apparently be given even when the works are to be on the council's own land. In fact there is no way in which compliance with this inconvenient section can be avoided except under the circumstances above.

It may be convenient to set out here the practice of the M. of H. when proposals come before them for the construction of works of sewerage or sewage disposal beyond the district of a local authority, in connection with an application for sanction to a loan. The Ministry require the clerk to the authority at the end of the period allowed for the service of objections to furnish a statutory declaration, duly stamped with an impressed stamp, showing that the requirements of the section have been complied with. A copy of the newspaper containing the advertisement, and of the form of notice served on the owners, lessees, and occupiers, and on the overseers and road authorities (if any) (see note (h) below) must be annexed to the declaration as exhibits. The Ministry also require to be furnished with a copy of any notice of objection which may have been served on the council under s. 33. If no such objection has been made, this must be stated in the declaration, but if any such objection has been made and not withdrawn, the district council must pass a resolution asking the Ministry to appoint an inspector for the purposes of s. 34 and forward a copy of it to the Ministry. Under no circumstances will they sanction a loan before the time limited by the notices has expired and any objections have been disposed of, and it is only under exceptional circumstances (such as when the works are entirely upon the authority's own land and statutory objections are very improbable) that the Ministry will consent even to investigate a scheme before the authority are in a position to proceed with the works. The procedure required by this section should be taken when land is proposed to be purchased for sewage disposal purposes, the works being described possibly in rather general terms. Otherwise the authority may find land on their hands which they cannot use.

Note to Section 32.

(d) One advertisement would satisfy the terms of this clause; but the authority may sometimes deem it advisable to advertise several times. The notice should be signed by the clerk to the authority. See s. 266, post. For a form of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 566.

Advertisement.

(e) The words in italics were repealed by the S. L. R. A., 1898.

(f) No time is specified when the notice is to be served, but it is to be implied from the next section that it should be three months before it is proposed to commence the works.

Time for serving notice.

(g) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. As to the authentication and service of such copy, see ss. 266, 267, post; and as to the term reputed owners, see note on s. 176, post, and note (b) to s. 6 of Private Street Works Act, 1892, post.

Persons to be served.

A council constructed a sewer under the bed of a goit without giving notice under this section to the defendant, who either owned the goit, or had an easement in it for the supply of water to his mill. He thereupon dug down to, broke and plugged the sewer. It was held that his interest in the goit, being an easement, came within the definition of "lands" in s. 4, ante, p 7, even if he was not the actual owner; and that the council had therefore no authority to carry the sewer under the goit without notice to him; but the defendant having cut the sewer and thereby caused great inconvenience and risk of disease to the public, costs were refused. It was further held that he was within his right in counterclaiming for damages, as the council by resisting his title had given him no opportunity of agreeing upon damages (Cleckheaton U. D. C. v. Firth (1898), 62 J. P. 536).

(h) It will be remembered that in both urban and rural districts the council is the surveyor of highways for the purposes of this section. See s. 144, post, p. 253, and s. 25 (1) of the L. G. A., 1894. If a sewer is to pass under a main road, the maintenance of which is in the hands of the county council, notice should be served upon that council. See s. 11 (12) of the L. G. A., 1888.

33. If any such owner, lessee, or occupier, or any such overseer, trustee (a), surveyor, or other person as aforesaid, or any other owner, lessee, or occupier who would be affected by the intended work, objects to such work, and serves notice in writing of such objection on the local authority (b) at any time within the said three months, the intended work shall not be commenced without the sanction of the Local Government Board after such inquiry as herein-after mentioned (c), unless such objection is withdrawn.

In case of objection, works not to be commenced without sanction of L. G. B.

(b) The notice should be addressed to the authority, but may, as it seems, be in general terms. For a form of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 567. If there be no objection, no reference to the L. G. B., now the M. of H., will be necessary unless a loan is required, as to which see s. 233, post.

(c) See ss. 32 and 34, and the notes thereto.

Section 34.

Inspector to hold inquiry and report to the L. G. B.

34. The Local Government Board may, on application of the local authority, appoint an inspector to make inquiry (a) on the spot (b) into the propriety of the intended work and into the objections thereto, and to report to the Local Government Board on the matters with respect to which such inquiry was directed, and on receiving the report of such inspector, the Local Government Board may make an order disallowing or allowing, with such modifications (if any) as they may deem necessary, the intended work.

(a) See, as to this, s. 293, post. These inquiries are usually combined with an inquiry into a loan application. The application should be made by the clerk, and should be accompanied by a copy of the resolution directing it. See note (c) to s. 32. For a form of application, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 568.

(b) The procedure will probably consist of an inquiry at the offices of the council, and a visit by the inspector to the locus in quo.

PRIVIES, WATER-CLOSETS, ETC.

Penalty on building houses without privy accommodation.

35. It shall not be lawful newly to erect any house (a), or to rebuild any house pulled down to or below the ground floor (b), without a sufficient (c) water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit (d) furnished with proper doors and coverings.

Any person who causes any house to be erected or rebuilt in contravention of this enactment shall be liable to a penalty (e) not exceeding twenty pounds.

This section must be read subject to ss. 39—42 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, where those sections are in force.

(a) See note on s. 4, ante, p. 20.

(c) In case of dispute the justices will decide as to what is or is not sufficient upon the evidence. P. built two cottages with one privy, which was found, as a fact, to be sufficient for the use of the occupiers of both cottages. It was held that he had complied with the requirements of this section, on the ground that it does not require a separate water-closet, earth-closet, or privy for every individual house built or rebuilt (R. v. Clutton Union or Clutton Union v. Pointing (1879), 4 Q. B. D. 340; 43 J. P. 686). See, however, the next section and the proviso thereto; and generally as to sanitary conveniences used in common, see P. H. A., 1890, s. 21, post.

(d) The expression "ashpit" includes any ashtub or other receptacle for the deposit of ashes, fæcal matter, or refuse (P. H. A., 1890, s. 11, post).

The words "furnished with proper doors and coverings" appear to refer to a water-closet, earth-closet, and privy, as well as to an ashpit (Clerkenwell Vestry v. Feary (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 703; 54 J. P. 676).

(e) See, as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post.

Power of local authority to enforce privy accommodation for houses.

36. If a house within the district of a local authority appears to (a) such authority by the report of their surveyor or inspector of nuisances (b) to be without a sufficient (c) water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit furnished with proper doors and coverings, the local authority shall (d), by written notice (e), require the owner or occupier (f) of the house, within a reasonable time therein specified, to provide a sufficient water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit furnished as aforesaid, or either of them as the case may require (g).

If such notice is not complied with, the local authority may (h), at the expiration of the time specified in the notice, do the work thereby required to be done, and may recover in a summary manner (i) from the owner (k) the expenses incurred by them in so doing, or may by order declare the same to be private improvement expenses (l): Provided that where a water-closet earth-closet or privy has been and is used in common by the inmates of two or more houses, or if in the opinion of the local authority a water-closet earth-closet or privy may be so used, they need not (m) require the same to be provided for each house. Section 36.

This section must now be read subject to ss. 39—42 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, where those sections are in force.

(a) These words make the authority in the first instance the judge of the sufficiency of the existing accommodation, but the question will be open on an appeal to the M. of H. under s. 268, the justices cannot try the question (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 2), [1899] 1 Q. B. 751; 63 J. P. 341). No appeal lies to the M. of H. until demand for payment has been made; a notice requiring work to be done under s. 36 is not a "decision" of the L. A. within s. 268 (R. v. L. G. B., Ex parte Thorp (1915), 84 L. J. K. B. 1184; 79 J. P. 248). Discretion and powers of local authority.

(b) This officer is introduced here for the first time. It should here be noticed that under s. 191, post, a medical officer of health may exercise any of the powers with which an inspector of nuisances is invested by this Act. A form of report will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 503. Inspector of nuisances.

(c) Though the officer is to report, the authority are to determine as to the sufficiency of the convenience. It was decided that a district board under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, where there is a clause identical with the above, could not lay down any general rule prescribing the use of privies, and requiring water-closets to be erected in the place of privies, in compliance with such general rule, and not with reference to the particular circumstances of the case. Where, therefore, the board were proceeding in accordance with such rule to erect water-closets in default of the owner, it was held that their proceedings could not be supported (Tinkler v. Wandsworth District Board of Works (1858), 27 L. J. Ch. 342; 22 J. P. 223); and this decision was followed in Wood v. Widnes Corporation, [1898] 1 Q. B. 463; 62 J. P. 117. On November 20th a report as to insufficiency of sanitary appliances was presented at a meeting of the "Unhealthy Dwellings Sub-Committee" of a municipal corporation; the sub-committee thereupon resolved to instruct their surveyor to prepare plans of the work required, and to request the property owners to attend the meeting at which such plans would be considered. On November 28th, at a meeting of the sanitary committee, the minutes of the sub-committee were read and adopted without discussion. On December 5th, at a meeting of the council, the proceedings of the sanitary committee were read and approved without discussion. Subsequently, the sub-committee resolved to recommend that notices specifying the necessary improvements be served on the various owners; and this resolution was adopted without discussion by the sanitary committee, and the clerk was ordered to serve the notices. The minutes of the sanitary committee were then adopted without discussion by the council. It was held (distinguishing Wood v. Widnes Corporation, supra) that there was evidence to justify a finding of fact that the order was made after separate consideration of each case (Agnew v. Manchester Corporation (1902), 67 J. P. 174; 1 L. G. R. 9; cf. Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 1), infra). Wood v. Widnes Corporation was also distinguished in Carton Colliery Co. v. Hemsworth R. D. C., 38 T. L. R. 395; 20 L. G. R. 227. As to acts and orders of a sub-committee ultimately approved by a committee and by the council, see also Bower v. Caistor R. D. C. (1911), 75 J. P. 186; 9 L. G. R. 448. See also Tottenham U. D. C. v. Hillier, 42 M. C. C. 221. Each case to be considered on its merits.

The L. G. B. expressed the opinion (prior to the passing of the P. H. A., 1907) that in the absence of special local Act provisions an authority had no power to incur expense in attempting to induce owners to undertake a general substitution of water-closets for privies. The Board considered that whatever the authority might do to bring about a change of system must be as part of a regular procedure in particular cases either under s. 36 or the nuisance provisions of the Act (ss. 91 et seq.), and that it was only under such circumstances, and upon default of an owner or owners, that expense might be incurred under the Act of 1875. Following this Conversion of privies into water-closets.

Note to Section 36.

doctrine the M. of H. do not sanction loans for the general purposes of conversion under s. 36; the circumstances are different under s. 39 (4) of the Act of 1907. In order to give an authority greater latitude in the way of procuring a general conversion of privies into water-closets, clauses are sometimes inserted in local Acts or Provisional Orders. These clauses for the most part follow a model series, the meaning and effect of which was considered in Bootle Corporation v. Owens (1898), 66 J. P. 357; 87 L. T. 74. See also Agnew v. Manchester Corporation, supra, and Smith v. Greenwood, [1907] 2 K. B. 385; 71 J. P. 353, where it was held under local Acts that, so long as each case was separately considered, there was power to require water-closets to be substituted for privies.

When an authority have decided that the existing accommodation is in a particular case insufficient, they have power to order what kind of accommodation must be provided, for the section gives them power to order the providing of a "sufficient water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit, . . . or either of them as the case may require" (St. Luke (Vestry of) v. Lewis (1862), 26 J. P. 262; 1 B. & S. 865). In R. v. Sherborne L. B., Times, March 20th, 1880; S. C., sub nom. Bogle v. Sherborne L. B. (1880), 46 J. P. 676, the defendant was the owner of several houses, each of which had a water-closet. The water-closets had no flushing apparatus, and were flushed by pouring water from pails. The surveyor of the local board having reported that the water-closets were insufficient, the board gave notice to B. to provide sufficient water-closets, and, on his failing to do so, executed the necessary works, and proceeded to recover the expenses from B. It was held that the justices were right in refusing to hear evidence as to the necessity of the work done; it was for the board to determine, on the report of the surveyor, whether the water-closets were sufficient, subject only to the right of appeal to the L. G. B. against a demand for the repayment of expenses under s. 268; and the duty of the justices in enforcing payment of the expenses incurred was purely ministerial. LUSH, J., said: "I do not say that there may not be water-closets in certain localities, and under certain circumstances, which would be sufficient without a flushing apparatus by way of a cistern or otherwise; but, on the other hand, it is quite obvious that there may be a water-closet which, under other circumstances, though a water-closet, is not sufficient, and it is for the local board to form their opinion. They know the locality, and the condition of the houses and the neighbourhood, and it is for them to form a judgment whether the report represents the water-closets as being inefficient for the purposes of the Act. It is quite clear that the local board took that view, because, immediately upon this, they gave a notice, resting upon the report of their surveyor, that the water-closets were insufficient by reason of their not being provided with cisterns and flushing apparatus. If that be so, I think it is quite enough to justify them in forming their opinion on the matter; therefore, we have no authority to interfere." And see, per POLLOCK, B., in Ex parte Whitchurch (1881), 6 Q. B. D. 545; 45 J. P. 617. In a subsequent case it was held that an authority had power under this section, upon being satisfied that a house was without a sufficient privy, to require the owner (subject to his right to appeal to the L. G. B. under s. 268) to provide a sufficient water-closet in the place of the existing privy (Nicholl v. Epping U. D. C., [1899] 1 Ch. 844; 63 J. P. 341). This decision was followed in Carton Colliery Co., Ltd. v. Hemsworth R. D. C., 38 T. L. R. 395; 20 L. G. R. 227. See also Sutcliffe v. Sowerby Bridge U. D. C., infra, and Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation (1912), 76 J. P. 365; 10 L. G. R. 710). A dictum apparently to the contrary in Smith v. Greenwood, supra, at [1907] 2 K. B. 389, 390, must, semble, be disregarded.

How far details may be specified.

An authority, having decided that a water-closet is necessary, must not dictate to the owner what kind of water-closet he is to provide (Wood v. Widnes Corporation, supra). An authority served on an owner a notice that, as his house was without a sufficient water-closet, he was "to provide a sufficient water-closet to the said house according to the specification given by this notice"; then followed the usual notice that if the work was not done the authority would enter and do it, and a specification of the kind of water-closet to be put in. In an action for an injunction to restrain the authority from entering, it was held, that the notice was bad on the ground that it did not allow the owner to comply with it by providing any other "sufficient" water-closet than that specified, although it was not given in pursuance of a general resolution without regard to the particular requirements (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 1), (1898), 62 J. P. 216; 78 L. T. 194). In this case it was suggested that the notice might be bad also for leaving out the words "earth-closet or privy," which, according to s. 36, the premises should be without before the notice can be given. In Sutcliffe v. Sowerby Bridge U. D. C. (1909), 73 J. P. 385; 100 L. T. 967, the appellant's premises were furnished with privies and a midden, but not with water-closets. An intimation had been given calling her attention to the insufficiency of the system, and asking her to provide suitable water-closets and ashbins in place of the existing privies and midden. She declined to put in water-closets, but was willing to put in tub closets. Notice was then served requiring her, as the houses were without sufficient "water-closets, ashpits and ashbins," to provide sufficient water-closets, ashpits and ashbins. It was held that although it said nothing about the insufficiency of the existing "privies," it was a sufficient notice. See also Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation, supra, for a decision as to the sufficiency of a notice. In such a case the remedy of the plaintiff is not by appeal to the M. of H. under s. 268 of the P. H. A., 1875; appeals to that body lie upon the question of insufficiency when a demand for payment is made (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 1) (1898), 62 J. P. 216; 78 L. T. 194). And see R. v. L. G. B., ante, p. 97.

Note to Section 36.

As to the enforcing of the provision of privy accommodation in houses let in lodgings, see s. 90, post, p. 161.

For the definition of an ashpit, and the application of the words "furnished with proper doors and coverings," see note (d) to the preceding section.

(d) This is a duty imposed upon the local authorities, and applies to each class of authority.

(e) See ss. 266 and 267, post, as to authentication and service. For a form of notice, see Nicholl v. Epping U. D. C., [1899] 1 Ch. 844, and also the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 504.

(f) See s. 306, under which the owner may be empowered to enter to do these works when the occupier prevents him.

(g) See note (c), supra.

(h) This proceeding is permissive, not obligatory. If the local authority apply to justices under s. 305 for an order entitling them to enter and do the work, the justices cannot consider evidence as to the sufficiency of the existing sanitary arrangements. The only mode of questioning the "sufficiency" is by appeal to the M. of H. under s. 268 when a demand for payment is made (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 2), [1899] 1 Q. B. 751; 63 J. P. 341). There is also a dictum to the effect that if in obedience to a notice an owner does certain work not considered sufficient by the authority, the justices cannot go into its sufficiency (Sutcliffe v. Sowerby Bridge U. D. C., supra, per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J.); but the case there cited for the proposition (Robinson v. Sunderland Corporation (No. 2)) does not appear to support the dictum. The justices can consider whether the notice is regular in form (Sutcliffe v. Sowerby Bridge U. D. C., supra). Jurisdiction of justices and Local Government Board.

(i) See s. 251, and note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 81. Justices, when enforcing payment of these expenses, act ministerially only. They cannot enter into the consideration of whether the accommodation existing before the notice was insufficient or not. If the notice was valid, the justices have no alternative but to order payment. The only method of questioning the propriety of the local authority's decision is by appeal to the M. of H. against a demand for payment (being a notice of decision) under s. 268, post (R. v. Sherborne L. B.; St. Luke's (Vestry of) v. Lewis, supra; R. v. L. G. B., Ex parte Thorp (1914), 79 J. P. 248; 13 L. G. R. 402, and cases in note (c), supra. And see also Hargreaves v. Taylor (1863), 27 J. P. 325; 3 B. & S. 613; St. John, Hackney (Vestry of) v. Hutton, [1897] 1 Q. B. 210; 61 J. P. 54). Recovery of expenses.

W. was required by an authority to do certain work under s. 36, and on her default they did the work themselves. Payment of the expenses was demanded by a written notice signed by the authority's rating surveyor, whose duty it was to sign all notices demanding payment of such expenses. On the authority taking proceedings to recover the expenses, it was objected that the notice required authentication, and therefore ought to have been signed by their clerk, surveyor, or inspector of nuisances. It was held that the rating surveyor was a proper person to make the demand; that the notice did not require authentication within the meaning of s. 266, and that therefore the signature referred to in that section was not necessary (Willis v. Rotherham Corporation (1911), 75 J. P. 421; 105 L. T. 436).

Note to Section 36.

The owner of eight houses was summoned by the respondents for £5 9*s.* 9*d.* expenses incurred by them in putting an earth-closet in each of four of the houses. The respondents had given notice to the owner to provide four of the houses with a sufficient closet, but he did not do the work, and it was done to five of the houses by the respondents; no notice having been given in respect of one of the houses, it was admitted that the respondents had no right to do the work at it. The expense of the work at the five houses amounted to £6 17*s.* 2*d.*, and the respondents deducted one-fifth for the house in respect of which no notice had been given, leaving a sum of £5 9*s.* 9*d.* Their surveyor had certified that he had "settled and apportioned" the sum payable by the owner in respect of the work at the four houses to be £1 7*s.* 5¼*d.* per house, making a total of £5 9*s.* 9*d.*, the sum claimed, and notice to that effect was given to the owner. It was held that the division of the expenses was not a settlement and apportionment within the meaning of s. 257, post, since it was not an apportionment between different owners, but merely a division of the expenses between the council and the owner, and that therefore the respondents were not bound, before taking proceedings, to wait until three months after the service of notice of the so-called "settlement and apportionment" (Bower v. Caistor R. D. C. (1911), 75 J. P. 186; 9 L. G. R. 448).

In Place v. Rawtenstall Corporation (1916), 80 J. P. 433; 14 L. G. R. 901, the plaintiff was required by a notice under a local Act to convert a pail closet into a water-closet and on his non-compliance therewith the work was done by the defendants. The defendants, however, had served similar notices in respect of other property adjoining, and as they were carrying out the work for the whole they constructed a combined drain, which drain at the point of passing the plaintiff's premises was at a greater depth than would have been necessary if solely for the drainage of his premises. In this way the support to the plaintiff's premises was disturbed, and damage ensued. Held, that the defendants were liable in damages in that the work which had been executed by them and which caused the subsidence was more than the plaintiff by the notice was required to do.

(k) Though the notice may be given to the owner or occupier, these expenses are to be recovered from the owner, who is defined in s. 4, ante, p. 8. He may appeal to the M. of H. under s. 268, post, after demand for payment has been made (R. v. L. G. B., Ex parte Thorp, ante, p. 97).

Accommodation common to two houses.

(m) It will be observed that the previous part of the section rendered it incumbent upon the authority to require a sufficient water-closet or privy to be made, and, therefore, though this proviso removes this compulsion in this particular case, it does not prevent them from making the requisition when they think proper to do so. The authority are the sole judges of the insufficiency under this section. At the same time it must be remembered that one privy may be sufficient for two houses, so as to protect the owners from liability to the penalty under s. 35. The two sections are entirely distinct (per COCKBURN, C.J., in R. v. Clutton Union or Clutton Union v. Pointing, ante, p. 96).

The owner of a house in Ireland let the ground and first floors to two tenants as separate tenements; the only water-closet and sanitary accommodation for both tenants was in the yard, and could only be reached by going through the living rooms on the ground floor. On the owner being charged for that a nuisance existed on the premises occupied by the tenant on the first floor, on account of "the premises so occupied being is such a state to be a nuisance and injurious to health by reason of same having no water-closet or other sanitary accommodation, and that said nuisance was caused by his act or default," the magistrates, having found as a question of fact that "there was sufficient accommodation for both tenants, and that the tenant of the first floor had unrestricted access to the yard through the kitchen on the ground floor, dismissed the case on the merits, being of opinion that the defendant was not bound in law to supply a separate water-closet and sanitary accommodation for the exclusive use of each of the two tenants." It was held that the justices were right (Belfast Corporation v. Thompson (1908), 42 Ir. L. T. 215).

As to earth-closets.

37. Any enactment in force within the district of any local authority requiring the construction of a water-closet shall be deemed to be satisfied by the construction, with the approval of the local authority, of an earth-closet. Section 37.

Any local authority may, as respects any house in which any earth-closet is in use with their approval, dispense with the supply of water required by any contract or enactment to be furnished to any water-closet in such house, on such terms as may be agreed on between such authority and the person providing or required to provide such supply of water.

Any local authority may themselves undertake or contract (a) with any person to undertake a supply of dry earth or other deodorising substance to any house within their district for the purpose of any earth-closet.

In this Act the term "earth-closet" includes (b) any place for the reception and deodorisation of fœcal matter constructed to the satisfaction of the local authority.

(a) See ss. 173, 174, post, as to this contract.

(b) As to the meaning of this word, see ante, p. 6.

38. (a) Where it appears to any local authority by the report of their surveyor (b) that any house (c) is used or intended to be used as a factory or building in which persons of both sexes are employed or intended to be employed at one time in any manufacture trade or business, the local authority may, if they think fit, by written notice (d) require the owner or occupier (e) of such house, within the time therein specified, to construct a sufficient (f) number of water-closets earth-closets or privies and ashpits for the separate use of each sex. Privy accommodation for factories.

Any person who neglects or refuses to comply with any such notice shall be liable for each default to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds and to a further penalty not exceeding forty shillings for every day during which the default is continued (g).

(a) Where s. 39 and the following sections of the P. H. A., 1907 (relating to closet accommodation), have been applied to any district, increased powers are given to a local authority. Later statutory provisions.

Where this section remains in force, it is supplemented as to factories and workshops by s. 9 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, in App. I., post, Vol. II. Where, however, s. 22 of the P. H. A., 1890, is in force, the present section is repealed by sub-s. (4) thereof, and s. 9 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, does not apply.

As to coal mines it was provided that "general regulations" should be made by the Home Secretary with respect to the provision and use of sanitary conveniences therein both above and below ground (Coal Mines Act, 1911, ss. 76, 86). As to the sanitary arrangements of public elementary schools reference may be made to a Memorandum of the L. G. B., dated February, 1910.

(b) In this section the surveyor only is referred to. His report will not conclude the authority; they have a discretion whether to act or not. A form of report will be found in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 505. By s. 5 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, where it appears to an inspector under that Act that any act, neglect, or default, in relation to any drain, water-closet, earth-closet, privy, ashpit, water supply, nuisance or other matter in a factory or workshop, is punishable or remediable under the law relating to public health and not under that Act, the inspector shall give notice in writing of such act, neglect, or default to the district council in whose district the factory or workshop is situate, and it shall be the duty of the district council to make such inquiry into the subject of the Duties of factory inspectors.

notice, and take such action thereon as to that council may seem proper for the purpose of enforcing the law, and to inform the inspector of the proceedings taken in consequence of the notice. The inspector may, for the purposes of this section, take with him into a factory or workshop, a medical officer of health, inspector of nuisances, or other officer of the district council. It is further provided by the same section that where notice of an act, neglect, or default, is given by an inspector under this section to a district council, and proceedings are not taken within one month for punishing or remedying the act, neglect, or default, the inspector may take the like proceedings for punishing or remedying the same as the district council might have taken; and shall be entitled to recover from the district council all such expenses in and about the proceedings as the inspector incurs, and as are not recovered from any other person, and have not been incurred in any unsuccessful proceedings. This section does not, however, take away the power of the local authority to act on the report of their surveyor. See, also, the provisions of the Act of 1901, ss. 97—102, as to bakehouses, in Appendix I., post, Vol. II.

(c) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 20.

(d) See ss. 266 and 267, as to service and authentication of notices. For a form of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 506.

(e) Under this section the occupier may be required to execute the works, as the occupier of a factory may be quite competent to attend to this complaint, and may be the proper person to remedy it.

Number of conveniences.

(f) The authority may properly specify the number which they think sufficient, but their decision will not conclude the question if the owner or occupier construct what he considers sufficient and the justices concur. Compare this section with the provisions of s. 36, and see notes to that section, ante, pp. 97—100. It is also to be noticed that, though the previous section applies to such a house as is herein described, it only requires a sufficient water-closet to be supplied. This section requires separate privies for the two sexes.

(g) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post.

Public necessaries.

39. Any urban authority may, if they think fit, provide and maintain, in proper and convenient situations (a), urinals water-closets earth-closets privies and ashpits (b), and other similar conveniences (c) for public accommodation.

Authority's discretion as to site.

(a) In Biddulph v. St. George's, Hanover Square (Vestry of) (1863), 33 L. J. Ch. 411; 8 L. T. 558, the defendants assuming to act under the corresponding section of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, resolved to erect a urinal in Grosvenor Place, adjacent to the wall of Buckingham Palace. STUART, V.-C., being of opinion that the erection of a urinal at that spot would be a serious injury to the neighbouring property, upon bill filed by a resident nearly opposite to the proposed site, granted an interlocutory injunction restraining the vestry from erecting it. Upon appeal the Lords Justices, being of opinion that the evidence did not show that the proposed urinal would be in point of law a nuisance, or that the vestry were exceeding their statutory powers in what they proposed to do, or that they were influenced by improper motives, discharged the order. This decision was followed upon an interlocutory motion by STIRLING, J., in Mogg v. Bocken (1888), 5 T. L. R. 22. In Mason v. Wallasey L. B. (1876), 58 J. P. 477, JESSEL, M.R., held that in the absence of improper motives an absolute discretion was given to the authority in choosing the site. And see the decision of POLLOCK, B., in Spicer v. Margate Corporation (1880), 24 Sol. J. 821. But while the authority have a discretion, they will be controlled by the court if they act in an unreasonable manner by erecting a urinal where it would be a nuisance to the owners of adjoining property (Vernon v. Vestry of St. James', Westminster (1880), 16 Ch. D. 449), inasmuch as the words used in the section are "proper and convenient"; and see Graham v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation (No. 1) (1892), 67 L. T. 260, 790, a case of a covenant to keep a space "open and unbuilt upon." Each case will, therefore, depend on its own circumstances.

Where a local board assuming to act under this section erected a urinal partly upon a highway and partly upon a strip of land belonging to the plaintiff and so near to other adjoining land of hers as to be a nuisance to her and to her tenants, and to depreciate the value of her property, it was held that she was entitled to an injunction to restrain the board from continuing the urinal upon her land or so near thereto as to cause injury or annoyance to her and her tenants. It was held also that it was not a matter in which notice of action under s. 264 (now repealed) was required, nor was compensation under s. 308 the proper remedy (Sellors v. Matlock Bath L. B. (1885), 14 Q. B. D. 928). This case was followed in Parish v. London Corporation (1901), 67 J. P. 55; 18 T. L. R. 63, and in Leyman v. Hessle U. D. C. (1902), 67 J. P. 56; 19 T. L. R. 73, where a urinal erected twelve feet from the entrance gates of the plaintiff's house and grounds was ordered to be removed because, by reason of its position and construction, it would be a serious annoyance to the plaintiff and those inhabiting his house. In another case, plaintiff was the owner of high-class houses overlooking a public park, and the authority resolved to erect a urinal and lavatory in the park, about 230 feet from his nearest house, and in full view of them all. Plaintiff moved for an injunction to restrain them from erecting the proposed building so as to cause a nuisance to himself and his tenants, and proved that the letting value of his houses would be diminished, and that there were other sites more convenient, but failed to prove that any nuisance by smell was likely to arise. CHITTY, J., held that an injunction ought not to be granted in the absence of evidence of bad faith or arbitrary, perverse and vexatious conduct in selecting the site (Pethick v. Plymouth Corporation (1894), 58 J. P. 476; 70 L. T. 304). Again, where it was proposed to erect a lavatory for women close to the plaintiff's property at a seaside resort, and it appeared that the roof of the lavatory and its approaches, but not the entrance to it, would be visible from the plaintiffs' house, it was held upon the particular facts that the lavatory was required; that it was to be in a proper and convenient situation; that it would not be a nuisance, either public or private; and that although it might prove detrimental to the property of the plaintiffs, yet as the authority had acted reasonably and bonâ fide an injunction must be refused (Mayo v. Seaton U. D. C. (1903), 68 J. P. 7; 2 L. G. R. 127). For a recent case in which an authority submitted to an injunction in respect of a urinal in a passage adjoining a ladies' club, see Halcyon Club, Ltd. v. Westminster Corporation (1912), Times, November 14th, 16th. In Mudge v. Penge U. D. C. (1916), 80 J. P. 441, the defendants erected public conveniences for the use of both sexes on the site of a former convenience in the stable yard of a public house. Adjoining there was a terrace of five houses, and it was alleged that the erection caused a nuisance to the whole of these and an injunction to remove was applied for. It was held that some nuisance was caused to the two houses nearest the convenience, but as this could be abated by structural alterations an order to this effect was made. (The principle laid down in the above cases may be compared with that involved in Goldberg v. Liverpool Corporation (1900), 82 L. T. 362, and Chaplin v. Westminster Corporation, [1901] 2 Ch. 329; 65 J. P. 661; and see Escott v. Newport Corporation, [1904] 2 K. B. 369; 68 J. P. 135.)

Conveniences in and under highways.

It appears from the judgment of LUSH, J., in Vernon v. St. James', Westminster (Vestry of), supra, that under this section a urinal may be erected upon a highway. In such a case it is unnecessary to proceed under ss. 84 et seq. of the Highway Act, 1835, for the powers of the authority include the power of depriving the public of their right to traverse the highway to the extent of the encroachment. The authority are also entitled to excavate the soil of the highway to a reasonable extent for the purpose of constructing an overground convenience.

By a local Act a municipal corporation were empowered to erect in any street or public place or on land belonging to them, water-closets, urinals, and lavatories for the use of the public, and the word "street" in that Act had the same meaning as in the Public Health Acts. The corporation made in a public promenade, which was by another local Act free and open for public use, but was not a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, certain water-closets, urinals, and lavatories, sunk to a depth of nine feet, and lighted by skylights level with the surface of the ground. The Court of Appeal held that, though the promenade was a public place, still as nothing had been dedicated to the use of the public except the surface, the soil under the surface could not be considered part of a public place or street within the meaning of the local Act, and that the corporation were not entitled to erect the conveniences in question (Baird v. Tunbridge Wells Corporation, [1894] 2 Q. B. 867). On appeal the House of Lords held that, even assuming the place to be a "street," the subsoil was not vested in the corporation, and that therefore they had no power to excavate the soil and erect lavatories below the surface of the street (Tunbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird, [1896] A. C. 434; 60 J. P. 788). See now s. 47 of the Act of 1907, infra.

In London it is provided by s. 44 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, that for the purpose of making public conveniences where they may deem them to be suitable, the subsoil of any road, exclusive of the footway adjoining any building or the curtilage of a building, shall be vested in the sanitary authority. It was held that in the absence of any bad faith this section empowered an authority to make underground approaches to such conveniences from either side of the street in the nature of a subway, although such subway might be used by persons not using the conveniences (Westminster Corporation v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., [1905] A. C. 426; 69 J. P. 425). Section 45 of the same Act empowers an authority to let public lavatories. A metropolitan borough council constructed and maintained public underground lavatories beneath streets, and it was held by the Court of Appeal (MATHEW, L.J., dissenting) that the council were liable for land tax in respect thereof as "having or holding a tenement or hereditament" (Westminster Corporation v. Johnson: Westminster Corporation v. Fuller, [1904] 2 K. B. 737; 68 J. P. 549). And as to land tax on a "tube" railway beneath a street, cf. Central London Rail. Co. v. City of London Land Tax Commissioners, [1913] A. C. 364; 77 J. P. 289.

By s. 47 of the P. H. A., 1907 (if declared by the M. of H. to be in force in any district, and subject to such conditions or adaptions as may be specified in the Order: "The local authority may provide and maintain in proper and convenient situations sanitary conveniences in or under any street repairable by the inhabitants at large, and may provide and maintain in proper and convenient situations lavatories in or under any such street for the use of the public, and may employ and pay attendants and make reasonable charges for the use of any sanitary conveniences (other than a urinal) or of any lavatory so provided. The local authority may make byelaws for the management of the sanitary conveniences and lavatories, and as to the conduct of persons frequenting the same. The local authority may let any such sanitary conveniences and any such lavatories for such periods, at such rents, and subject to such conditions as to the charges to be made for the use thereof and otherwise, as they think proper."

Conveniences and lavatories may, under s. 47 of the Act of 1907, be provided in or under streets repairable by the inhabitants. It is to be noticed, however, that the section does not vest the subsoil of the street in the authority for the purpose of this provision. Cf. s. 44 (2) of the London Act, supra, and Westminster Corporation v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., supra, decided thereunder. Consequently, the case of Tunbridge Wells Corporation v. Baird, supra, would appear to show that an authority must, if required, pay for the use of the subsoil of the street. It will be seen also that s. 47, supra, allows sanitary conveniences and lavatories to be let. Cf. s. 45 of the London Act, supra, and the cases of Westminster Corporation v. Johnson and Westminster Corporation v. Fuller cited in connection therewith.

Regulations, etc.

As to the power of an urban authority to make regulations and byelaws for the management and use of public sanitary conveniences, and to make charges for the use of water-closets in districts where the P. H. A., 1890, has been adopted, see s. 20 of that Act, post. See also s. 47 of the P. H. A., 1907, supra, as to the power to make byelaws and to make charges for the use of sanitary conveniences (other than urinals) and lavatories.

Conveniences outside district.

Under certain circumstances an urban authority may erect a public sanitary convenience on a site beyond the boundary of their district. The site must, however, be convenient to residents within the district, and the authority clearly have no power to encroach upon a highway in an adjoining district.

Rural authorities.

If a rural district council desire to provide public sanitary conveniences they must apply to the M. of H., under s. 276, for an order giving them the necessary urban powers, and if they wish to make regulations and byelaws for the management of the conveniences, or to charge fees, they must apply under s. 5 of the P. H. A., 1890, for powers under ibid., s. 20 (see, however, supra, as to powers obtainable under the Act of 1907). The Ministry readily grant these powers in regard to the parish or parishes in which action is proposed, if they are assured that suitable sites have been or can be secured, and proper facilities exist for drainage and a supply of water. The expenses are always declared in the order to be chargeable as special expenses. Note to Section 39.

(b) See the definition of ashpit in s. 11 of the P. H. A., 1890.

(c) See note to s. 45 as to this term being held to include refuse tips in certain circumstances.

40. Every local authority shall (a) provide that all drains water-closets earth-closets privies ashpits and cesspools within their district be constructed and kept so as not to be a nuisance or injurious to health. Drains, privies, etc., to be properly kept.

(a) There is no provision in the Act, unless s. 299, post, applies, for compelling performance of this duty.

41. On the written application of any person (a) to a local authority, stating that any drain (b) water-closet earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool on or belonging to any premises within their district is a nuisance (c) or injurious to health (but not otherwise) (d), the local authority may, by writing (e), empower their surveyor or inspector of nuisances, after twenty-four hours' written notice (f) to the occupier of such premises, or in case of emergency (g) without notice, to enter (h) such premises, with or without assistants, and cause the ground to be opened, and examine such drain water-closet earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool. If the drain water-closet earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool on examination be found to be in a proper condition, he shall cause the ground to be closed, and any damage done to be made good as soon as can be, and the expenses of the works shall be defrayed by the local authority. If the drain water-closet earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool on examination shall appear to be in bad condition, or to require alteration or amendment (i), the local authority shall forthwith cause notice in writing (k) to be given to the owner or occupier (l) of the premises requiring him forthwith or within a reasonable time (m) therein specified to do the necessary works; and if such notice is not complied with, the person to whom it is given shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten shillings for every day during which he continues to make default (n), and the local authority may, if they think fit, execute such works, and may recover in a summary manner from the owner the expenses (o) incurred by them in so doing, or may by order declare the same to be private improvement expenses (p). Examination of drains, privies, etc. on complaint of nuisance.

Additional powers for the testing of drains may be obtained by the application in any district of the P. H. A., 1907, s. 45. Additional powers under P. H. A., 1907.

By s. 46 of the same Act additional powers in connection with cesspools, ashpits, etc., wells or disused wells, may be obtained. See also s. 34 of the same Act, referred to in note (d), infra.

(a) The written application required by s. 41, supra, need not necessarily proceed from some person other than the authority's surveyor or inspector of nuisances (Wood Green U. D. C. v. Joseph, [1907] 1 K. B. 182; 71 J. P. 89). This case was affirmed in both the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords, the point for which it is now cited not being seriously contested. For a form of application, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 542. Who may apply.

(b) See the definition of a "drain" in s. 4, ante, p. 24. For the purposes of this section the expression has an extended meaning in districts where s. 19 of the

Note to Section 41.

P. H. A., 1890, is in force. By that section: "(1) Where two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with a public sewer by a single private drain, an application may be made under section forty-one of the Public Health Act, 1875 (relating to complaints as to nuisances from drains), and the local authority may recover any expenses incurred by them in executing any works under the powers conferred on them by that section from the owners of the houses in such shares and proportions as shall be settled by their surveyor or (in case of dispute) by a court of summary jurisdiction; (2) Such expenses may be recovered summarily or may be declared by the urban authority to be private improvement expenses under the Public Health Acts, and may be recovered accordingly; (3) For the purposes of this section the expression 'drain' includes a drain used for the drainage of more than one building." See this section and the notes thereto, post.

"Single private drains."

Nuisance or injurious to health.

(c) From the construction which has been placed on similar language in ss. 47, 91, it may be inferred that if the nuisance complained of consists of something offensive to the senses, it is not necessary that it should also be injurious to health. See Malton Urban Sanitary Authority v. Malton Farmers' Manure Co. (1879), 4 Ex. D. 302; 44 J. P. 155; Banbury L. B. v. Page (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 97; 46 J. P. 184; Bishop Auckland L. B. v. Bishop Auckland Iron Co. (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 138; 47 J. P. 389). See as to the liability of an owner or occupier for damage done by the escape of sewage in consequence of a defective drain on his premises, Humphries v. Cousins (1877), 2 C. P. D. 239; 41 J. P. 280; Holland v. Lazarus (1897), 66 L. J. Q. B. 285; 61 J. P. 262.

(d) Where s. 34 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, s. 41, supra, is to have effect as if for the words "but not otherwise" there were substituted the words "or when on the report in writing of their surveyor or inspector of nuisances the local authority have reason to suspect that any such drain, water-closet, earth-closet, privy, ashpit or cesspool is a nuisance or injurious to health."

Notices.

(e) This might be under the hand of the clerk, and a notice of the authority entered on the council's minutes, or it might be under the seal of the council. See a form in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 543.

(f) Query, who is to give this notice? Apparently either the clerk, or surveyor, or inspector of nuisances, under the direction of the authority. As to the authentication and service of the notice, see ss. 266, 267, post. A form of notice will be found in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 543.

The giving of this notice is not a condition precedent to the right of the authority to recover expenses incurred in remedying a nuisance (Bromley Borough Council v. Cheshire, [1908] 1 K. B. 680; 72 J. P. 34).

"Emergency."

(g) The authority will determine in the first place whether there is a case of emergency, but, semble, this might be disputed in an action for trespass. There should be an entry on the minutes to the effect that the particular case is one of emergency.

Power of entry.

(h) Whether, if admission be refused, a penalty is incurred for "obstructing" the officer unless he has obtained a justice's order, see 77 J. P. N. 325, 556.

Section extends to structural defects.

(i) The section applies to every case where the fact that a drain is in bad condition, or requires alteration and amendment, causes the drain to be a nuisance or injurious to health, even though the alteration or amendment necessary to abate the nuisance may involve an alteration of the structure, and in places where the P. H. A., 1890, is in force, s. 19 of that Act applies the section to the same extent to every drain which is a "single private drain" (Southwold Corporation v. Crowdy (1903), 67 J. P. 278; 1 L. G. R. 899, distinguishing Fulham (Vestry of) v. Solomon, [1896] 1 Q. B. 198; 60 J. P. 72). In the latter case, KENNEDY, J., had said: "In my view, the words 'is found not to be in proper order or condition' in s. 40 (2), and 'appears to be in bad order or condition' in s. 41 (2) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, do not refer to defects in the structure; nor do the words 'require alteration or amendment' in the last mentioned sub-section, refer to structural alteration." It should, however, be observed that the dictum of KENNEDY, J., is clearly due to a context in the London Act dealing specifically with structural matters as alternative to questions of condition. Moreover, as was pointed out in the Southwold Case, supra, he was not dealing with a case where the bad order and condition were alleged to make a thing (in that case, a water-closet) of itself a nuisance. The water-closet was constructed before the authority had passed byelaws relating to the construction of water-closets, and was not constructed in the manner which the byelaws subsequently passed required. It was held that the byelaws had no application, and that, even supposing they applied, the proceedings were not proper to enforce them. Note to Section 41.

(k) See ss. 266, 267, post, as to authentication and service of this notice. For a form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 544.

(l) See s. 306, post, under which the owner may be empowered to enter to do these works if the occupier prevents him. It will be observed that the notice may be given to either the occupier or the owner, although by a subsequent clause the expenses incurred by the authority in doing the works are to be recovered from the owner only. In an action for a nuisance arising out of defective drains, the occupier and not the owner is primâ facie liable (Russell v. Shenton (1842), 3 Q. B. 449), but the owner may be liable on indictment if it appears that he erected the building, etc. so as to create the nuisance, or so that it was likely to produce a nuisance after it had been let to a tenant (R. v. Pedly (1834), 1 A. & E. 822). And see notes to s. 94, post, p. 180. Owner or occupier.

Where several houses belonging to different owners are drained by a single private drain, which becomes a nuisance and injurious to health, and the authority, acting under this section, and s. 19 of the Act of 1890, serve upon each of the owners a notice addressed to them jointly to do the necessary works for the abatement of the nuisance, the fact that any one of such owners would be compelled to go upon the premises of the others in order to execute the necessary works, is no bar to the validity of the notice. Therefore, the authority, upon non-compliance with the notice, are entitled to execute the works themselves, and recover the expenses from the owners in the manner provided by s. 19 (Lancaster v. Barnes U. D. C., [1898] 1 Q. B. 855; 62 J. P. 405; but cf. Haedicke v. Friern Barnet U. D. C., cited in the notes under s. 19 of the P. H. A., 1890).

(m) In Hornsey Corporation v. Kershaw (1909), 73 J. P. 335, Middlesex Quarter Sessions held a notice to do work within seven days to be an unreasonable and therefore invalid one.

(n) See s. 251, post, as to the recovery of this penalty.

(o) As to the recovery of these expenses, see note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 81. The order of the authority is conclusive and cannot be controlled or altered by the justices in proceedings to enforce payment, though an appeal will lie to the M. of H. under s. 268, against a demand for payment (being a "notice of decision"), post. See the notes to s. 36, ante, p. 96, and see also Willesden U. D. C. v. Taylor (1916), 80 J. P. N. 65. Recovery of expenses.

In Hornsey Corporation v. Kershaw (1909), 73 J. P. 335, Middlesex Quarter Sessions held that in a case under s. 41 and s. 19 of the Act of 1890, an appeal lay to sessions against a decision of justices who had refused to order an owner to pay his apportioned share of expenses, on the ground of the unreasonableness of the notice. The appeal failed.

In Walthamstow U. D. C. v. Henwood, [1897] 1 Ch. 41; 61 J. P. 23, the plaintiffs, who had given notice to an owner to do what was necessary to abate a nuisance under this section, and, on his default, had executed the works, obtained a declaration that they were entitled to a charge on the land and premises in respect of the sum apportioned together with interest and costs, the amount to be raised, if necessary by sale in chambers.

SCAVENGING AND CLEANSING.

Regulations as to Streets and Houses.

42. Every local authority may, and when required by order (a) of the Local Government Board shall, themselves undertake or contract for (b)—

The removal of house (bb) refuse from premises;

The cleansing of earth-closets privies (c) ashpits and cesspools (d); either for the whole of any part of their district: Moreover every urban Local authority to provide for cleansing of streets and removal of refuse.

Section 42.

authority and any rural authority, invested by the Local Government Board with the requisite powers (e) may, and when required by order of the said Board shall, themselves undertake or contract for (f) the proper cleansing of streets (g), and may also themselves undertake or contract for the proper watering (g) of streets for the whole or any part of their district (h).

All matters collected by the local authority or contractor in pursuance of this section may be sold (i) or otherwise disposed of (ii) and any profits thus made by an urban authority shall be carried to the account of the fund or rate applicable by them for the general purposes of this Act; and any profits (k) thus made by a rural authority in respect of any contributory place shall be carried to the account of the fund or rate (l) out of which expenses incurred under this section by that authority in such contributory place are defrayed.

If any person removes or obstructs the local authority or contractor in removing any matters by this section authorised to be removed by the local authority, he shall for each offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds (m): Provided that the occupier of a house within the district shall not be liable to such penalty in respect of any such matters which are produced on his own premises and are intended to be removed for sale or for his own use, and are in the meantime kept so as not to be a nuisance (n).

Order of Local Government Board: how enforced.

(a) It may be (see R. v. Walker (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 355; 39 J. P. N. 438), that if such an order be disobeyed the authority may be indicted for a misdemeanor. It is not like an Order of the L. G. B. under the Poor Law Amendment Acts, which was made enforceable by penalties under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 99. Procedure under s. 299 (post), however, would not apply to a neglect of this duty.

Incidence of expenses.

The expenses incurred by an urban authority under this section in removing refuse, etc., are chargeable as part of their ordinary expenses under the Act (to the general district rate if one is levied). If the work is restricted to part of the district the urban council may avail themselves of s. 211 (4) of the Act. A rural council cannot restrict the incidence of expenses to a smaller area than the contributory place even with the assistance of the M. of H. under s. 229. It is true that under s. 277 a "special drainage district" may be formed by resolution for the purpose of charging thereon exclusively the expenses of sewerage, water supply, or other works, but such districts become new rating areas for all the purposes of the Act (see s. 229), and the Ministry require very strong grounds to be shown before approving such a district—usually in connection with sewerage schemes involving considerable capital expenditure.

(b) For a form of contract see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 586.

The M. of H. hold that a local authority have no statutory power to make and enforce a charge upon occupiers for removing house refuse or cleansing any of the receptacles mentioned in the section; but see Leck v. Epsom R. D. C., [1922] 1 K. B. 383; 86 J. P. 56.

As to the removal of refuse from mews, and other premises see s. 50, post, p. 118.

Byelaws to facilitate removal.

In districts where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 26, is in force, if the authority themselves undertake or contract for the removal of house refuse they may make byelaws imposing on the occupier of any premises duties in connection with such removal so as to facilitate the work which the authority undertake or contract for. See the section and the notes thereto, post.

What is "house refuse" or retrade "fuse."

(bb) "House refuse" does not extend to dust and ashes, the exclusive produce of manufactories (Lyndon v. Standbridge (1857), 2 H. & N. 45. And see Law v. Dodd (1848), 1 Ex. 845). Ashes arising from coals burnt in the furnace of a steam-engine used for the purpose of sawing and lifting timber and other materials for carrying on the business of a pianoforte manufacturer, were held not to be house refuse in Gay v. Cadby (1877), 2 C. P. D. 391 ; 41 J. P. 503. Under the Metropolis Management Acts a local authority was held bound to remove refuse from a workhouse, although such workhouse was by a local Act rated at a less amount than other property in the parish (Holborn Union (Guardians of) v. St. Leonard's (Vestry of), Shoreditch (1876), 2 Q. B. D. 145 ; 40 J. P. 740).

Note to Section 42.

Under the Metropolis Management Acts it was held that a local authority were not bound to remove articles improperly placed in a dustbin, such as "broken glass, shoes, and other things which it might not be convenient otherwise to get rid of." Where such articles were removed, and were afterwards appropriated by servants of the authority, it was held that the contractor who had purchased and undertaken to dispose of the house refuse was not entitled to compensation in respect of them, on the ground that his contract only included such refuse as the authority were bound to remove (Collins v. Paddington (Vestry of) (1879), 48 L. J. Q. B. 345 ; 43 J. P. 367).

A magistrate decided that ashes from the furnaces of an hotel were not "refuse of trade" within the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 129, and declined to state a case on the ground that his decision was by the section final and conclusive and that no point of law arose. It was held that there was a point of law involved, and he was required to state a case (R. v. Bridge (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 609 ; 54 J. P. 629). On a case being stated, it appeared that the appellants had refused to remove from the respondent's hotel, unless paid a reasonable sum for so doing, the ashes and clinkers produced in the furnaces of boilers used to generate steam for supplying power for the electric lighting of the hotel, for heating the public rooms and passages, for cooking, and for working the lift and pumping water. It was held that the ashes and clinkers were domestic refuse, and not the refuse of a trade manufacture or business (St. Martin's Vestry v. Gordon (1890), 59 L. J. M. C. 131 ; 54 J. P. 791 ; affirmed, [1891] 1 Q. B. 61 ; 55 J. P. 437). On the other hand, under the present section (s. 42), clinkers from the boilers of a steam laundry were held not to be "house refuse" in London and Provincial Laundry Co. v. Willesden L. B., [1892] 2 Q. B. 271 ; 56 J. P. 696.

The Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 141, defines "house refuse" as meaning ashes, cinders, breeze, rubbish, night soil, and filth, but not including trade refuse ; and "trade refuse" as meaning the refuse of any trade, manufacture or business, or of any building materials.

A sanitary authority in the metropolis refused to remove from a large hotel the refuse, consisting of ashes from the grates, sawdust strewn on the kitchen floors for the sake of cleanliness, empty bottles and tins of the sauces and various comestibles used in the kitchen, straw-packing cases for bottles, tea leaves, waste paper, egg shells, lemon peel, the general dust from the rooms and staircases, and from time to time small quantities of broken crockery-ware and glass, on the ground that it was "trade refuse." Upon a question raised under s. 33 (2) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, a Divisional Court held (affirming the magistrate's decision) that the refuse was "house refuse" within s. 30 of that Act, and that the authority were bound to remove the same without payment (Westminster Corporation v. Gordon Hotels Co., [1906] 2 K. B. 39 ; 70 J. P. 258). The Court of Appeal and House of Lords held that the decision of a magistrate under s. 33 (2) upon the question whether particular refuse is or is not trade refuse is final. See [1908] A. C. 142 ; 72 J. P. 201 ; cf. Wills v. McSherry (No. 2), [1914] 1 K. B. 616 ; 78 J. P. 120, and Kydd v. Liverpool Watch Committee, [1908] A. C. 327 ; 72 J. P. 395. In Vestry of St. Margarets v. Queen Anne Mansions Co. (1893), 57 J. P. N. 277, it was held that the clinkers and ashes from the furnaces of an electric light plant supplying current to residential flats was trade refuse within the meaning of s. 33 of the P. H. (London) Act, 1891. In a later case the appellants were the occupiers of premises which they used as a tea-shop, providing customers with refreshments and food for consumption on the premises, some of the food being cooked or prepared on the premises. No one slept on the premises at night. The refuse from the premises consisted of ashes and clinkers, coffee grounds, newspaper, cabbage leaves, egg-shells, dust, and general dirt, broken crockery, tea leaves, potato parings, scrapings from the sink, and sweepings from rooms. It did not include scraps left by customers, which were given away in charity. Upon a question raised under s. 30 (2), it was held that the refuse was "house refuse," and not "trade refuse," and that therefore the authority were bound to secure its due removal (Lyons & Co., Ltd. v. London Corporation, [1909] 2 K. B. 588; 73 J. P. 372).

Removal of "trade refuse" under P. H. A., 1907.

Where s. 48 of the P. H. A., 1907, is in force in any district in pursuance of an order of the M. of H., the local authority may be required to remove trade refuse in consideration of the payment of a reasonable charge. See that section and notes thereto, post.

Explosives in dustbins, etc.

The Home Secretary, acting under the Explosives Act, 1875, ss. 37, 39, has made an Order, dated October 28th, 1904, in the following terms: "(1) Explosive shall not be deposited in any receptacle or place appropriated for refuse, and shall not be handed or forwarded to any dustman or other person employed in the removal of refuse, unless due notice has been given to such dustman or person, or to the dustman or person whose duty it is to remove refuse from such receptacle or place. (2) Explosive shall not be conveyed in any carriage or boat appropriated for the removal of refuse. In the event of any breach (by any act or default) of the foregoing byelaws, or an attempt to commit such breach: The person committing the offence shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding, in the case of the first offence, £10, and in the case of the second offence or any subsequent offence, £20, and also the following persons, viz., the owner of the carriage or boat in respect of which, or containing the explosive in respect of which, the offence is committed, the person in charge of such carriage, and the person owning such explosive, shall each be liable to a similar penalty, unless he proves that he had supplied proper means and issued proper orders for the observance, and used due diligence to enforce the observance, of these byelaws."

Broken glass in dustbins.

As to broken glass, etc. in refuse, see notes to the P. H. A., 1890, s. 26, post.

(c) An authority cannot undertake the cleansing of such privies only as meet their approval. See Pegg and Jones, Ltd. v. Derby Corporation, on p. 112, post.

Cleansing of privies and cesspools.

Where a local authority has taken upon itself, under this section, the cleansing of privies belonging to cottage property, but has, after notification of an outbreak of typhoid fever, failed to eradicate fever germs, which have penetrated crevices in the brickwork, and cause a nuisance, such authority cannot, under s. 94, call upon an owner of the property to abate the nuisance by abolishing privies and substituting water-closets (Barnett v. Laskey (1899), 68 L. J. Q. B. 55; 63 J. P. 5).

(d) The defendants undertook under this section the duty of cleansing the cesspools of their district. For this purpose they contracted for the removal of the sewage from the cesspools, the contractor using the defendants' sewage cart and depositing the filth upon the lands of neighbouring farmers by arrangement which he made with them. The defendants did not instruct him where to deposit the sewage. The contractor, without the permission of the plaintiffs, deposited sewage removed from the cesspools upon the plaintiffs' land, causing a nuisance to them and their tenants. In an action for an injunction and damages, it was held that the defendants were liable (Robinson v. Beaconsfield R. D. C., [1911] 2 Ch. 188; 75 J. P. 353).

An authority made a byelaw that every occupier of premises should once at least in every three months cleanse every cesspool belonging to such premises. Subsequently the authority passed a resolution that "the scavenging of privies, closets and ashpits be undertaken by the board at once." Tenders were obtained and the work carried out under contracts. Certain owners and occupiers of premises on which there was a cesspool used to empty and cleanse the cesspool, but afterwards ceased to do so and contended that the obligation was on the authority. It was held that the words of s. 42 must be read distributively, and that an authority may undertake or contract for the cleansing of earth-closets, privies, ashpits and cesspools, or such of them as they may by resolution decide to deal with, and that, therefore, there was no obligation on the authority to empty and cleanse the cesspool (Stainland and Holywell Green Industrial Corn and Provision Society v. Stainland with Old Lindley U. D. C., [1906] 1 K. B. 233; 70 J. P. 150; Leck v. Epsom R. D. C., [1922] 1 K. B. 383; 86 J. P. 56; 20 L. G. R. 173).

Under s. 46 of the P. H. A., 1907 (if it be applied in the district of any local authority) a cesspool which is prejudicial to health or otherwise objectionable for sanitary reasons, may be required to be filled up, removed or altered.

Rural authorities.

(e) See s. 276, post. Orders conferring these powers on rural authorities usually declare the expenses to be special.

Without, however, being invested with urban powers it would seem that a rural authority, now that they are the highway authority of their district (see s. 25 of the L. G. A., 1894), may water streets to the extent required for purposes of proper maintenance; and charge the expenses as general under s. 29 of the L. G. A., 1894.

Note to Section 42.

Terms of contract.

(f) See form of agreement as to supply of horses, etc. for this purpose in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 593. In Moon v. Camberwell Borough Council (1903), 68 J. P. 57; 89 L. T. 595, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendants whereby he agreed to supply horses, harness, etc. for scavenging work during the period of one year "whenever thereto required" by the defendants' engineer. The conditions annexed to the contract provided that the defendants might, if they thought proper, without in any way vitiating the contract, execute on their own account, or employ other contractors to execute, any works ordered by them. Some time before the expiration of the period covered by the contract the defendants ceased to employ the plaintiff, and gave the work to another contractor. In an action to recover damages for breach of contract, it was held that there was no obligation, either express or implied, on the part of the defendants to employ the plaintiff.

(g) It will be observed that the authority's operations need not be confined to streets repairable by the inhabitants at large. The cleansing and watering of private streets by the authority does not affect their right to recover private improvement expenses. See also s. 148.

Cleansing and watering streets.

(h) Note the distinction. The authority may be compelled to cleanse the streets, but may water the streets at their discretion. See also notes to s. 43, post, p. 112.

The powers of s. 42 (as to street watering) do not enable district councils to undertake the tarring of roads for dust prevention. Such work must be done in pursuance of the council's ordinary highway powers. As regards main roads maintained by the county council, a district council are empowered to contribute to the expense under s. 3 of the Highways and Bridges Act, 1891, the operation being regarded as an improvement of the roads. As to main roads maintained by a district council under s. 11 of the L. G. A., 1888, it is possible that the arrangement with the county council provides for the matter. A rural district council who succeeded a highway board may restrict the incidence of expense to parishes specially benefited under the proviso to s. 3 of the Act of 1891; but under all other circumstances there is a difficulty in doing so, the M. of H. being indisposed to declare (under s. 49 of the P. H. A., 1890) any expenses special which are distinctly highway expenses, in view of s. 29 (a) of the L. G. A., 1894.

(i) See Collins v. Paddington (Vestry of), cited on p. 109, ante.

Disposal of refuse.

(ii) See s. 45, post, p. 115, as to providing place of deposit. Matters collected must not be disposed of so as to cause injury to other persons. In Atkinson v. Corporation of Huddersfield (Times, April 20th, 1893), CHITTY, J., granted an injunction against the defendant corporation from discharging snow, street sweepings, and other refuse into a river at a point above the mills of the plaintiffs so as to cause injury to the plaintiffs by the pollution of the river. In Jones v. Welshpool Corporation, Times, Nov. 18th, 1904, a nuisance arising from a field on which refuse was tipped was restrained by the granting of a perpetual injunction restraining further tipping so as to cause or occasion any nuisance to the plaintiff, the defendants undertaking within fourteen days to cover with road sweepings or earth such portions of this heap of refuse as had not already been so covered. In Priest v. Manchester Corporation (1915), 84 L. J. K. B. 1734; 13 L. G. R. 665, the defendants bought land for the purpose of tipping refuse thereon. Subsequently the vendor sold the remaining portion to a purchaser who formed a street and built houses abutting thereon. The defendants acting under their powers from time to time deposited refuse on the land purchased by them, and this gradually increasing in bulk and becoming impervious to surface water caused such water which previously flowed away from the street, to be diverted and overflow into the street and form holes, ruts, or gullies dangerous to users of such street. The plaintiff whilst crossing the street fell into one of these gullies and was injured. Held, that the gully in the street was a nuisance caused by the defendants without justification and that the defendants were liable in damages. Held, further, that where a local authority purchases land for the purpose of tipping refuse thereon such purchase does not impliedly authorise the local authority to tip in such a way as to cause a nuisance on adjoining land retained by the vendor when such tipping can be done without causing a nuisance. Whether if it were impossible to use the land for tipping purposes without creating a nuisance the local authority would be so authorised, quære. See also Robinson v. Beaconsfield R. D. C., in note (d), supra; Att.-Gen. v. S. E. & C. Rail. Co.'s Managing Committee, cited in note (g) under s. 91, post, p. 170, and cases in notes to ss. 44, 45, pp. 113—115. The M. of H. hold that a L. A. can properly utilise surplus products of a destructor in manufacturing useful articles such as paving slabs and mortar provided that the manufacture is primarily for their own use and not for the purposes of sale.

Note to Section 42.

Profits.

(k) It is presumed that the contractor may contract to receive these matters for his own profit, and thereby reduce the amount otherwise payable to him.

(l) I.e., to the credit of the common fund of the rural district or of the separate rate for special expenses, as the case may be. See note (e).

(m) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post; and see Borrow v. Howland (1896), 60 J. P. 391; 74 L. T. 787.

Retention of valuable refuse.

(n) It is not enough that the matters are produced upon the premises; they must be intended to be removed for sale or for use, e.g., for manure, and until removed they must be kept so as not to create a nuisance; so that if the matters create a nuisance, which word must here, it is presumed, signify a public nuisance, the authority or the contractor may remove them and must not be obstructed.

Under 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, ss. 59, 60, the scavenger of a metropolitan district was entitled to take away from houses and premises "their soil, ashes, cinders, rubbish, dust, dirt and filth." It was held that these words included only such dust, etc. as were, in the contemplation of the owners, rubbish or refuse, and which they desired to dispose of in that character. Therefore, where brewers burnt coals in the process of brewing, which coals were only partially consumed by having once passed through the fires, and removed them mixed with the dust and ashes arising from the same fires to other premises, where they used them for heating water to cleanse their casks, it was held that the scavenger was not entitled to claim any of the articles so removed (Filbey v. Combe (1837), 2 M. & W. 677). See also Law v. Dodd (1848), 1 Ex. 845.

Penalty on neglect of local authority to remove refuse, etc.

43. If a local authority who have themselves undertaken or contracted for the removal of house refuse from premises, or the cleansing of earth-closets privies ashpits and cesspools fail, without reasonable excuse (a), after notice in writing (b) from the occupier of any house within their district (c) requiring them to remove any house refuse or to cleanse any earth-closet privy ashpit or cesspool belonging to such house or used by the occupiers thereof, to cause the same to be removed or cleansed, as the case may be, within seven days, the local authority shall be liable to pay to the occupier of such house a penalty not exceeding five shillings for every day during which such default continues after the expiration of the said period (d).

Reasonable excuse.

(a) It may be that if an authority could show that though they had once undertaken, etc. they had abandoned the work for good reasons, this would be a reasonable excuse. An authority were summoned under this section for failing without reasonable excuse to cleanse the privies in a factory after having undertaken the cleansing of privies in their district. A local Act provided that all privies should be subject to the approval of the authority, but the privies in question had not been approved by them as they did not satisfy their requirements. The authority had themselves undertaken the cleansing of all privies which had received their approval. It was held, that although s. 42 authorised an authority to undertake the cleansing of privies "either for the whole or any part of their district," this did not empower them to undertake the cleansing merely of such privies as had received their approval; that the authority must be treated as having undertaken the cleansing of all privies in their district, and that the non-approval of the privies in question was not a reasonable excuse for failure to cleanse them (Pegg and Jones, Ltd. v. Derby Corporation, [1909] 2 K. B. 511; 73 J. P. 413). The decision of a local authority to cleanse cesspools once in every three months may afford a reasonable excuse within the meaning of this section. See Leck v. Epsom R. D. C., [1922] 1 K. B. 383; 86 J. P. 56.

(b) It is not clear how this notice is to reach an authority, who meet only at intervals. The suggestion which occurs, is that it should be served upon their clerk at their offices. For a form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 589. Note to Section 43. Notice.

(c) It is presumed that the word "district" must be read as "part of district" when the authority have availed themselves of their powers under the preceding section to limit their operations to a defined portion of their district. It is understood that this was the view taken by the L. G. B. "District."

(d) See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post. It is presumed that the justices can settle the amount of the penalty to be paid by the authority. The corporate property of the authority, whether urban or rural, would be liable to a distress for the payment of this penalty. Having regard to the penalty imposed by this section, it may be doubted whether an occupier could maintain an action for damages through the failure to remove refuse, etc. See Ellis v. Strand District Board of Works (1892), 67 L. T. 307; 8 T. L. R. 739, and Saunders v. Holborn District Board of Works, [1895] 1 Q. B. 64. Recovery of penalty.

44. Where the local authority do not themselves undertake or contract for— Power of local authority to make byelaws imposing duty of cleansing, etc. on occupier.

The cleansing of footways and pavements (a) adjoining any premises,

The removal of house refuse (b) from any premises,

The cleansing of earth-closets privies ashpits and cesspools belonging to any premises (c), they may make byelaws (d) imposing the duty of such cleansing or removal, at such intervals as they think fit, on the occupier of any such premises.

An urban authority may also make byelaws (d) for the prevention of nuisances (e) arising from snow filth dust ashes and rubbish (f), and for the prevention of the keeping of animals (g) on any premises so as to be injurious to health.

(a) These are included under the term "streets" in s. 42. The authority may contract for the cleansing of the road, and make byelaws for the cleansing of footways and pavements, but cannot make byelaws for the cleansing of the roads. "Pavements."

(b) As to what is "house refuse," see s. 42, note (bb), ante, p. 108. See Borrow v. Howland (1896), 60 J. P. 391; 74 L. T. 787, as to the liability of an occupier under s. 16 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, to a penalty for refusing to allow scavengers to enter his premises for the removal of refuse. "House refuse."

(c) For the purpose of the exercise of this power to make byelaws the words of the section must be read distributively. See Stainland, etc. Society v. Stainland with Old Lindley U. D. C., cited in the notes to s. 42, ante, p. 110. "Earth-closets, etc."

(d) Byelaws under s. 44 may be made for part of the district, while the authority themselves do the work (under s. 42) in the remainder of the district. A difficulty occurs, however, as regards the expenses of the authority in such a case, particularly in the case of a rural authority, who have not the same powers in regard to a contributory place as an urban authority have for their district under s. 211 of creating a separate area for rating purposes. Byelaws generally.

As to the making, confirmation and enforcement of byelaws, see ss. 182—184, and s. 251. Byelaws under this section are unnecessary if, by the operation of any local Act, ss. 87—98 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, are in force within the district. Byelaws under this section are confined to the imposing of the duty. It does not authorise any direction as to the manner of cleansing, except as regards prescribing the intervals. Byelaws under other statutes.

Where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 26, is in force, the authority may make byelaws: "(a) For prescribing the times for the removal or carriage through the streets of any fœcal or offensive or noxious matter or liquid, whether such matter or liquid shall be in course of removal or carriage from within or without or through their district: (b) For providing that the vessel, receptacle, cart, or carriage used therefor shall be properly constructed and covered so as to prevent the escape of any such matter or liquid: (c) For compelling the cleansing of any place whereon such matter or liquid shall have been dropped or spilt in such removal or carriage." See the section and the notes thereto, post.

(e) See further, the provisions of s. 91, as to nuisances arising out of some of these matters.

Byelaws as to filth nuisances and keeping animals.

(f) Sweeping mud into a sewer was held to be an offence against 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 205, which forbids the sweeping into any sewer of any "soil, rubbish, or filth, or any other thing" (Metropolitan Board of Works v. Eaton (1884), 48 J. P. 611; 50 L. T. 634).

A railway company received in their goods yard a truck of manure, which had been carried by them in the ordinary course of their business. It arrived on Sunday, and notice was at once given to the consignee, who proceeded to remove it on Monday; on being emptied it gave forth a very offensive smell. The company were convicted under the following byelaw: "No person shall deposit, throw or allow to run, lodge, or accumulate upon the surface of any street, square, court, highway, or place, or on any waste or unoccupied ground, or on any uncovered drain, ditch, watercourse, sink, pond, or other collection of water, or expose or cause to be exposed in any other manner whatever within the district, any animal or vegetable matter, fish, offal, ordure, blood, bones, manure, shells, broken glass, china, or earthenware, dust, ashes, house refuse, waste, or runnings from any manufactory, or other offensive or noxious matter whatever":—Held, that the conviction was wrong (L. B. & S. C. Rail. Co. v. Haywards Heath U. D. C. (1899), 80 L. T. 266).

(g) In Everett v. Grapes (1861), 25 J. P. 644; 3 L. T. 669, it was held, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 90, that a byelaw aimed against keeping pigs in a borough generally, instead of keeping them so as not to be a nuisance, was bad. But in Wanstead L. B. v. Wooster (1873), 37 J. P. 403; 38 J. P. 21, a byelaw against keeping pigs within one hundred feet of a dwelling-house was held to be valid on the ground that in a town the doing so was likely to be a nuisance that it might be prohibited altogether. It was also decided that the byelaw might require the removal of filth, etc. without any previous requisition by the authority. But the principle of this decision was held to apply only to urban and not to rural districts. Therefore, where a rural authority having urban powers under this section made a byelaw prohibiting the keeping of swine within fifty feet of any dwelling-house within the district, it was held that the byelaw was unreasonable and bad (Heap v. Burnley Union (1884), 12 Q. B. D. 617; 48 J. P. 359). COLERIDGE, L.C.J., said that it was impossible to attempt to lay down what under all circumstances would be a reasonable byelaw; but it seemed to him unreasonable to say, that in country districts nobody should keep a pig within fifty feet of his dwelling-house. Following this decision the M. of H. do not confirm any byelaw prohibiting absolutely in rural districts the keeping of pigs within a specified distance of any dwelling-house. They usually suggest a byelaw making the prohibition dependent upon the manner in which the sty or place in which the pigs are kept is maintained. The corresponding section of the Public Health (Ireland) Act, 1878, s. 54, enables urban authorities to make byelaws for "the regulation of the keeping of animals on any premises, or for the prevention of such keeping, so as to be injurious to health." A byelaw under this section that: "No swine shall be kept in any yard within a distance of twenty-one feet from a dwelling-house or public building or any building in which any persons may be or may be intended to be employed in any manufacture, trade, or business without the special permission of the sanitary authority," was held valid (Lutton v. Doherty (1885), 16 L. R. Ir. 493).

It is not necessary in order to procure a conviction under such a byelaw that a nuisance has been caused by the breach of it (Tong Street L. B. v. Seed (1874), 39 J. P. 278). A byelaw made by an urban authority imposed a penalty for keeping swine within fifty yards of a dwelling-house. The defendant, in the course of his business, on receiving orders for pigs, used to bring them into the urban district within fifty yards of a dwelling-house in the morning and keep them there till the evening, when they were sent off by railway or otherwise. The pigs were not fed on the premises nor allowed to remain there at night. It was held that there was, nevertheless, a "keeping" of the swine within fifty yards of the dwelling-house, contrary to the byelaw (Steers v. Manton (1893), 57 J. P. 584). See further, as to keeping pigs, s. 47 (1), post, p. 116. Note to Section 44.

The L. G. B. stated that they did not consider that cock crowing could be dealt with by a byelaw under this section. See s. 91, post, p. 165, as to nuisances. See also s. 23 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and s. 16 of the L. G. Act, 1888, as to the powers of town councils and county councils to make byelaws for good rule and government, etc. Cock crowing.

45. Any urban authority may, if they see fit, provide in proper and convenient situations receptacles for the temporary deposit and collection of dust ashes and rubbish; they may also provide fit buildings and places for the deposit of any matters collected by them in pursuance of this part of this Act. Power to provide receptacles for deposit of rubbish.

It is from this section that an urban authority derive their power to provide a refuse destructor. Such an appliance can only be provided for dealing with refuse collected by the authority in pursuance of their statutory powers. Upon receiving an application from a rural authority for sanction to a loan for the provision of a destructor, the L. G. B. stated that the authority must first be invested with the powers of the section, and that if it was desired to treat the expenses as special expenses an order must be obtained under s. 229. The same view is taken with regard to the provision of refuse tips by rural authorities.

It will be observed that the section only authorises the provision of permanent buildings and places of deposit when the refuse is collected by the authority themselves; this restriction, however, is not contained in s. 39. The point is sometimes of importance to rural authorities who require urban powers under s. 276 for the provision of certain conveniences of the kind mentioned in s. 45, and do not themselves propose to collect refuse.

As to the acquisition of land for the purposes of this section, see s. 175, post, and as to the expense, see s. 207, post. The sale of land to a local authority for the purpose of tipping rubbish thereon by a vendor who retains adjoining land does not impliedly authorise the local authority to tip refuse in such a way as to cause a nuisance on the adjoining land where such tipping can be done without causing a nuisance. Whether in the event of its being impossible to use the land for tipping without causing a nuisance the local authority would be so authorised, quære? Priest v. Manchester Corporation (1915), 84 L. J. K. B. 1734; 13 L. G. R. 665.

Where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 20, is in force, the authority may make regulations and byelaws for sanitary conveniences provided by them.

As to an authority's liability to a person upon whose land, or in whose stream, their servants or contractors deposit refuse collected by them, see Robinson v. Beaconsfield R. D. C., on p. 110, ante, and cases in note (ii), on p. 111, ante. As to damages for trespass by tipping rubbish, see Whitwham v. Westminster Brymbo Coal and Coke Co., [1896] 2 Ch. 538. Using land as a rubbish shoot may amount to waste in a lessee (West Ham Central Charity Board v. East London Waterworks Co., [1900] 1 Ch. 624).

46. Where, on the certificate of the medical officer of health or of any two medical practitioners (a), it appears to any local authority that any house or part thereof is in such a filthy or unwholesome condition that the health of any person is affected or endangered thereby, or that the whitewashing cleansing or purifying of any house or part thereof would tend to prevent or check infectious disease, the local authority shall give notice in writing (b) to the owner or occupier (c) of such house or part thereof to whitewash cleanse or purify the same, as the case may require (cc). Houses to be purified on certificate of officer of health or of two medical practitioners.

If the person to whom notice is so given fails to comply therewith within the time therein specified, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten shillings for every day during which he continues to make default; and the local authority may, if they think fit, cause such house or part thereof to be whitewashed cleansed or purified, and may recover in a summary manner the expenses (d) incurred by them in so doing from the person in default (e).

(a) They must be persons registered under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, and 49 & 50 Vict. c. 48. Certificates signed by unregistered persons are invalid. See 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 37, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 7. A form of certificate will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 596.

(b) See as to this notice, ss. 266, 267, post. See form of notice in Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 596. The authority may select either the owner (defined in s. 4, ante, p. 8) or the occupier.

(c) See s. 306, post, under which the owner may be empowered to enter to do these works when the occupier prevents him.

(cc) As to how far it is necessary to specify in the notice the precise evils complained of and the remedies desired, see Gala-Water District Committee v. Buchan (1920), J. 87.

(d) See as to the recovery of the penalty and expenses, s. 251, post. And see note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 81.

(e) Further provisions are contained in the sections relating to nuisances, ss. 91—97, post. See also the provisions of the Factory Acts, 1901 and 1907. These Acts, which relate to factories, bakehouses and laundries, are set out in App. I., post, Vol. II. See also the provisions of the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 5, post, and the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, 1890—1919, post, Vol. II. The latter Acts deal with houses in a condition dangerous to health, so as to be unfit for human habitation.

Penalty in respect of certain nuisances on premises.

47. Any person who in any urban district—

(1) Keeps any swine or pigstye in any dwelling-house, or so as to be a nuisance to any person (a); or

(2) Suffers any waste or stagnant water to remain in any cellar or place within any dwelling-house for twenty-four hours after written notice (b) to him from the urban authority to remove the same; or

(3) Allows the contents of any water-closet privy or cesspool to overflow or soak therefrom, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings, and to a further penalty not exceeding five shillings for every day during which the offence is continued (c), and the urban authority shall (d) abate or cause to be abated every such nuisance, and may recover in a summary manner (e) the expenses incurred by them in so doing from the occupier (f) of the premises on which the nuisance exists.

(a) See note (g), ante, p. 114. Keeping swine in a city is a nuisance at common law (R. v. Wigg (1705), Salk. 460). The sub-section is expressed very generally, and seems to give a public remedy for a private grievance. A byelaw under s. 44, ante, p. 113, may regulate the erection of pigstyes so far as injury to health is concerned; but if a nuisance be caused, compliance with the byelaw will not protect the offender from the consequences of this section. See as to swine in the metropolis, 54 & 55 Vict. c. 76, s. 17; Chelsea (Vestry of) v. King (1864), 34 L. J. M. C. 9; 29 J. P. 39.

The sub-section applies not merely to the keeping of swine in improper places, but to keeping in an improper manner (Digby v. West Ham L. B. (1858), 22 J. P. 304). It is not necessary to prove that the keeping of the swine is injurious to health (Banbury Sanitary Authority v. Page (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 97; 46 J. P. 184). It is clear swine are not to be kept in a dwelling-house at all. As to what amounts to "keeping" swine, see Steers v. Manton, ante, p. 115.

(b) See as to this notice, which, as it seems, should be given by the clerk of the authority, ss. 266, 267. A form of notice will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 597.

(c) See s. 251, as to the recovery of the penalty. It would seem that the continuance referred to, except under sub-s. (2), must be after the conviction, for there is no other date from which the time is to be calculated under sub-ss. (1) and (3). Note to Section 47.

(d) There is no distinct provision in the Act for compelling performance of this duty. Note (e) to s. 299, post, may be referred to.

(e) As to the recovery of these expenses, see note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 81, and s. 251, post.

(f) Note here that the recovery is to be from the occupier; no recourse is given against the owner. It will be seen that this section applies to such matters as would generally form nuisances to which ss. 91 et seq., post, pp. 165 et seq., would apply. Then recourse may be had against the owner as well as the occupier. The above section does not require proof of any injury to health. See Banbury Sanitary Authority v. Page, supra.

Offensive Ditches and Collections of Matter.

Provision for obtaining order for cleansing offensive ditches lying near to or forming the boundaries of districts.

48. Where any watercourse or open ditch lying near to or forming the boundary between the district of any local authority and any adjoining district is foul and offensive, so as injuriously to affect the district of such local authority, any justice having jurisdiction in such adjoining district may, on the application of such local authority (a), summon the local authority of such adjoining district to appear before a court of summary jurisdiction (b) to show cause why an order should not be made by such court for cleansing such watercourse or open ditch, and for executing such permanent or other structural works as may appear to such court to be necessary; and such court, after hearing the parties, or ex parte in case of the default of any of them to appear, may make such order (c) with reference to the execution of the works, and the persons by whom the same shall be executed, and by whom and in what proportions the costs of such works shall be paid, and also as to the amount thereof, and the time and mode of payment, as to such court may seem reasonable.

(a) It is presumed that this application must be made by an officer of the local authority, who will be directed to make such application by their order, which should be entered on the minutes. It cannot be necessary that the application should be under seal. As to the appearance of the authority summoned, see s. 259, post.

(c) This order will justify the entry on any lands when the entry may be necessary for the execution of the order. As to compensation, see s. 308, post. As to the time allowed for appealing from the order, see R. v. Barnet R. S. A. (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 558; 41 J. P. 6; and s. 31 of the S. J. A., 1879, set out in the notes under s. 269, post. The W. rural sanitary authority summoned the N. rural sanitary authority under this section, for not cleansing a ditch situated on the boundary of, but in, the N. district. The justices made an order on the W. authority to cleanse the ditch, the nuisance being caused by sewage from their district. The W. authority contended that they could not comply with the order without committing a trespass, but it was held that such a defence could not be set up under the section, and that the order was right (Woburn Sanitary Authority v. Newport Pagnell Sanitary Authority (1887), 51 J. P. 694).

Removal of filth upon certificate of inspector of nuisances.

49. Where in any urban district (a) it appears to the inspector of nuisances that any accumulation of manure dung soil or filth or other offensive or noxious matter ought to be removed, he shall give notice to the person to whom the same belongs, or to the occupier of the premises

whereon it exists, to remove the same (b); and if such notice is not complied with within twenty-four hours from the service thereof, the manure dung soil or filth or matter referred to shall be vested in and be sold or disposed of by the urban authority (c), and the proceeds thereof shall be applied in payment of the expenses incurred by them in the execution of this section; and the surplus (if any) shall be paid on demand to the owner of the matter removed.

The expenses of removal by the urban authority of any such accumulation, if and so far as they are not covered by the sale thereof, may be recovered by the urban authority in a summary manner (d) from the person to whom the accumulation belongs, or from the occupier of the premises, or (where there is no occupier) from the owner (e).

(a) It will be observed that this section, which places great power in the hands of the inspector of nuisances, applies only to urban districts. It is not the practice of the M. of H. to put this provision in force in rural districts, unless the circumstances are shown to be very exceptional. The view of the department is that rural councils can deal with nuisances arising from accumulations of offensive or noxious matters under the nuisance clauses of the Act (ss. 91 et seq.); they may also make and enforce byelaws as to nuisances under s. 44, and may themselves undertake the collection of house refuse and the cleansing of receptacles under s. 42. Section 50 is also considered unsuitable to rural districts.

(b) For a form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 598. A company, in whom a harbour was vested, were held bound, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 12, to remove sea-weed, which, by the action of the sea, was drifted into the harbour, and being left there became a nuisance (Margate Pier and Harbour Proprietors v. Margate Town Council (1869), 33 J. P. 437; 20 L. T. 564). An accumulation of stable dung, which may be dealt with under this section, may also be within the provisions of ss. 91—94, post, pp. 165—176 (Smith v. Waghorn (1863), 27 J. P. 744).

(c) No express power is given to the officer to enter and remove the offensive matter; but it is implied, otherwise there would be no expenses in the execution of the section. A similar clause existed in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 59, and in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 18; but the latter Act took effect after an order of justices for the abatement of a nuisance. The present Act adopts the provisions in the latter Act for the disposal of the surplus, and not that of the earlier Act, so that the owner may sometimes be benefited by the action of the authority. As to the sale of the matters, see s. 101, post, p. 187. It must be noticed that a sale is not absolutely required, but that the matter may be otherwise disposed of, perhaps by deposit on land of the local authority, on payment of the value minus the cost of removal.

It is the duty at common law of the owner of vacant land to prevent his land from being a public nuisance, although such a nuisance may be caused by the acts of other persons; and the Attorney-General, on behalf of the public, is entitled to an injunction to prevent such owner from committing a breach of that duty. The fact that a sanitary authority under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, have power, or a duty, to themselves abate a nuisance, or to take proceedings to procure its abatement, does not, having regard to ss. 13 and 138 of that Act, prevent them from obtaining, in an action brought by them as relators with the Attorney-General, an injunction to prevent the continuance of the nuisance (Att.-Gen. v. Tod-Heatley, [1897] 1 Ch. 560).

(d) See, as to the recovery of these expenses, note (e) to s. 21, ante, p. 81, and s. 251, post.

(e) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8.

Periodical removal of manure from mews and

50. Notice may be given by any urban authority (a) (by public announcement (b) in the district or otherwise) for the periodical removal of manure or other refuse matter from mews stables or other premises; and where any such notice has been given any person to whom the manure or other refuse matter belongs who fails so to remove the same, or permits a further accumulation, and does not continue such periodical removal at such intervals as the urban authority direct, shall be liable without further notice to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings (c) for each day during which such manure or other refuse matter is permitted to accumulate. Section 50. other premises.

(a) See note (a) to preceding section.

(b) This word was used in 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 53, from which this clause is taken. It has no definite meaning. An advertisement in the district, and printed placards affixed to the walls of mews, stables, or other places, seem to satisfy the term. Compare s. 36 (2) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. For a form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 599.

(c) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post. The accumulation referred to must be after the notice.

WATER SUPPLY.

Powers of Local Authority in relation to Supply of Water.

51. Any urban authority may (a) provide their district (aa) or any part thereof, and any rural authority may (a) provide their district (aa) or any contributory place therein, or any part of any such contributory place, with a supply of water proper and sufficient for public and private purposes (b), and for those purposes or any of them, may— General powers for supplying district with water.

(1) Construct and maintain waterworks (c), dig wells, and do any other necessary acts ; and

(2) Take on lease or hire any waterworks (c), and (with the sanction of the Local Government Board) purchase any waterworks (c), or any water or right to take or convey water, either within or without their district (d), and any rights powers and privileges of any water company (e) ; and

(3) Contract (f) with any person for a supply of water.

(a) These words are in themselves permissive and enabling, but if an authority do not avail themselves of this power where a public water supply is required, and they can procure it at a reasonable cost, they will be in default, and proceedings may be taken under s. 299, post. A rural authority cannot, at the expense of the rates, promote a private Bill to attain that end (Cleverton v. St. German's R. S. A. (1886), 56 L. J. Q. B. 83 ; 3 T. L. R. 43). They might probably promote a Bill, if they can find persons to provide the money (Att.-Gen. v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board (1905), 69 J. P. 177 ; 3 L. G. R. 764) ; and such Bill might contain a clause providing (in the event of it becoming an Act) for payment of all the expenses out of the rates (cf. Uttoxeter Act, 1892). As to the powers of a parish council in relation to water supply, see the L. G. A., 1894, s. 8 (1) (e), (i), (k) ; but s. 8 (3) specially provides that nothing in that section shall derogate from any obligation of a district council with respect to the supply of water or the execution of sanitary works. Duty of local authority.

The Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (set out at length, post), provides by s. 3 that it shall be the duty of every rural authority subject to certain conditions to see that every occupied dwelling-house within their district has, within a reasonable distance, an available supply of water sufficient for the consumption and use for domestic purposes of the inmates of the house. The same section provides that nothing in that Act is to be deemed to relieve the authority of their duty to provide a water supply under this Act. Section 11 of the Act of 1878 provides that the L. G. B., now the M. of H., may, if they think fit, by order invest any urban authority with all or any of the powers and duties which are by that Act given to a rural authority, and such investment may be made either unconditionally or subject to any conditions to be specified by the Board as to the time, portion of the district, or manner during at or in which the powers and duties are to be exercised.

(aa) Semble, an authority may carry out works for procuring a water supply in an adjoining district without obtaining any consent from the authority of such district. Cf. Withington L. B. v. Manchester Corporation, [1893] 2 Ch. 19; 57 J. P. 340.

"Limits of supply" in case of companies.

A company, authorised to supply water within a certain area, extended its main to the boundary of such area, and from thence continued it at a consumer's expense to a spot outside the area, where they erected a hydrant and meter from which pipes were laid to the consumer's house: it was held that the company were supplying water outside their area, and must be restrained (Att.-Gen. v. West Gloucestershire Water Co., [1909] 2 Ch. 338; 73 J. P. 453). See also Att.-Gen. v. Frimley, etc. Water Co., [1908] 1 Ch. 727; 72 J. P. 204; Marriott v. East Grinstead Gas and Water Co., [1909] 1 Ch. 70; 72 J. P. 509, and Att.-Gen. v. South Staffordshire Water Co. (1909), 25 T. L. R. 408, as to water companies exceeding their statutory powers by sinking wells on additional land acquired only for "ancillary" purposes. See Birr R. D. C. v. Birr U. D. C., [1915] 1 I. R. 413, which was an action to restrain the defendants from supplying water in plaintiffs' district and which failed only on the ground of acquiescence.

The Defence of the Realm (Acquisition of Land) Act, 1916, s. 7, empowered supplies to be given during the recent war outside a water authority's area on the requisition of or at the request of a Government Department and subject to certain conditions and restrictions.

Purposes of supply.

(b) 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 75, limited the power to private purposes. This section extends it to public purposes also, but this general language must be qualified by the nature and extent of the district. See also West Surrey Water Co. v. Guardians of Chertsey Union, cited in the notes to s. 52, post, p. 126. As to the supply of water for trade purposes, see s. 65, post, p. 142.

Purchase of waterworks.

(c) See the definition of waterworks in s. 4, ante, p. 34. The sanction of the L. G. B. (now the M. of H.) is here introduced, and operates to protect both the owners of water rights and the interests of the ratepayers. Section 63, post, p. 139, provides for leases and sales of waterworks to an authority.

Practice as to loans.

Upon receiving an application for their sanction under the section (usually combined with a proposal to borrow money) the M. of H. require the district council to furnish a copy of the resolution directing it, a copy of the resolution passed by the members of the water company under s. 63, and a copy of a provisional agreement for the purchase of the undertaking. Financial particulars of the district are also required as well as the following information with respect to the waterworks: (1) A full description, accompanied by a plan or plans of the works; (2) particulars as to the nature, age and condition of each portion of the works; (3) whether the water has to be raised by mechanical means or is supplied wholly by gravitation, and, if the former, the height to which it has to be raised and the nature and power of the pumping machinery; (4) a description of the source or sources of water, including information as to the volume obtainable from it (or from each as the case may be) in the driest seasons; and (5) the quality of the water as shown by analysis, or, if it is derived from more than one source, by a separate analysis of the water from each source. The Ministry require further to be informed of the nature of the water rights of the company; the number of persons supplied with water; and whether the company supply water beyond the district; and to be furnished with a statement showing the annual income of the company and the annual working cost of the undertaking, including establishment charges and interest on capital. A local inquiry is usually directed.

The L. G. B. stated that it was not clear to them that an urban district council could, under the P. H. Acts, acquire rights to supply water beyond the limits of their district, or acquire an undertaking to which was attached an obligation to furnish such a supply. The difficulty could be removed either by the urban council entering into an agreement with the neighbouring council to purchase the undertaking jointly, or by an arrangement under which each council would separately purchase so much of the rights, property, etc. of the company as might suffice for the supply of their district, the purchase being preceded by an arrangement under which one of the councils would subsequently supply the other under s. 61, post, p. 135.

By an agreement (sanctioned by statute) two water companies agreed that company A. should take over the works, provide for a mortgage debt, and pay interest on the shares of company B. The deed carrying out this transaction provided that if company A. (or their intended assignees, the corporation or local board), being desirous of becoming the absolute and unrestricted owners of the works of company B., subject only to the mortgage debt, should " on or before any December 25th, after having given to company B. six months' previous notice of their desire to avail themselves of the option thereby given, pay unto company B. £46,246, the amount of their share capital, the party so paying should become absolutely entitled to the works." In June, 1870, the corporation, who had acquired the interest of company A., gave notice to company B. of their intention to pay the £46,246, on December 25th following, but were unable, from want of funds, to carry out the purchase. In June, 1871, they again gave notice that they would pay the money on December 25th, 1871:—Held, that the corporation by giving the first notice and failing to act upon it, had not lost the right given to them by the deed of purchasing after six months' notice on or before any December 25th (Ward v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co. (1871), L. R. 13 Eq. 243). A water board was constituted by special Act with the right of supplying water within the boundaries of two boroughs and certain outlying districts, provided that when so required by the sanitary authority of any such outlying district the board should sell to such sanitary authority the mains, pipes, and fittings belonging to the board within that district at a price to be fixed, in default of agreement, by an arbitrator, and that after such sale the board should cease to supply water within such district. In an arbitration under this proviso, between the board and an outlying district, it was held that in fixing the price the basis of calculation should be merely the value of the mains, pipes, and fittings regarded as plant in situ, capable of earning a profit, and that the arbitrator must not include in the price compensation to the board for the loss of the right to supply water in the outlying district after the sale (Stockton and Middlesbrough Water Board v. Kirkleatham L. B., [1893] A. C. 444; 57 J. P. 772). See observations on this case in London C. C. v. London Street Tramways Co., [1894] 2 Q. B. 189; affirmed sub nom. London Street Tramways Co. v. London C. C., [1894] A. C. 489; and see also for decisions as to " purchase clauses " in the case of gasworks, p. 368, post, Wolstanton United U. D. C, and Burslem Corporation, In re (1907), 72 J. P. 28; 6 L. G. R. 523; Hamilton Gas Co. v. Hamilton Corporation, [1910] A. C. 300; 74 J. P. 185; Perth Gas Co. v. Perth Corporation, [1911] A. C. 506; and in the case of tramways cases noted under the Tramways Act, 1870, s. 43, in App. I., post, Vol. II.

Construction of new waterworks.

When a scheme of water supply proposed by a district council involves the sinking of a well to obtain the required supply, the M. of H. require the council to proceed by steps, and are only willing at first to sanction a loan for the amount necessary for the boring and preliminary expenses. This loan is usually repayable within five years, but the Ministry express willingness, in the event of a good supply of water being found, to sanction the reborrowing, for an extended period, of so much of the loan as is properly outstanding. Any provisional agreement entered into with the owner of the land should be so framed as to secure to the district council the possession of the land in the event of the boring proving satisfactory. In the case of all lands required for the scheme the freehold should be obtained, if possible; otherwise the period allowed for the repayment of the loan may be curtailed. Upon the completion of a borehole the Ministry require the yield of water to be ascertained by continuous pumping night and day without cessation for a period of at least fourteen days, and particulars of the results to be supplied to them in a particular form.

Where a rural district council determine to adopt plans for the water supply of a contributory place, they are required to give notice to the parish council before entering into a contract. See the L. G. A., 1894, s. 16 (3), post.

The Limited Owners Reservoirs and Water Supply Further Facilities Act, 1877, in App. I., post, Vol. II., provides that the construction or erection of reservoirs or other works of a permanent character for the supply of water to any sanitary or other local authority or water company, shall be deemed to be an improvement of land within the meaning of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 114, s. 9, and shall be sanctioned by the commissioners if it can be shown to their satisfaction that such reservoirs or works will effect a permanent yearly increase in the value of settled lands, or will be permanently productive of a yearly revenue to the owner of such lands exceeding the yearly amount proposed to be charged thereon; and the construction of such works is to be deemed to include the purchase by the landowner of any water right or other easement which might otherwise interfere with or prevent the construction of the same or any such supply of water as aforesaid (s. 5). Any landowner charging or proposing to charge his estate with the cost of the construction of reservoirs or other works for the supply of water under the Act, may enter into any agreement for the supply of water to any sanitary or other local authority, for any term not exceeding the number of years during which the cost of the improvement or any part of it is made a charge upon the estate: Provided that every such agreement be approved of by the commissioners, and that no premium or benefit in the nature of a premium be reserved thereby by the landowner (s. 6). The commissioners referred to were the Inclosure Commissioners, afterwards the Land Commissioners under the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 48, the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries under 52 & 53 Vict. c. 30, s. 2, and 3 Edw. 7, c. 31, s. 1, and now the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries under 9 & 10 Geo. 5, c. 91. See also 60 & 61 Vict. c. 44, and 62 & 63 Vict. c. 46.

Rating of waterworks.

As to the rating of waterworks provided by a local authority, see R. v. West Middlesex Waterworks Co. (1859), 28 L. J. M. C. 135; 1 El. & El. 716; Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Overseers of Putney (1860), 8 W. R. 607; Worcester Corporation v. Droitwich Assessment Committee (1876), 2 Ex. D. 49; 41 J. R. 246; Metropolitan Water Board v. Assessment Committee of the Chertsey Union, [1916] 1 A. C. 337; 80 J. P. 137. And as to the rateability of a "catchment area," see Liverpool Corporation v. Chorley Union, [1913] A. C. 197; 77 J. P. 185.

Income tax on waterworks.

An authority who make a profit on their waterworks are liable to pay income tax thereon: cf. Mullingar R. D. C. v. Rowles, [1913] 2 I. R. 44, and other cases in notes to s. 211, post. A rural authority purchased water in bulk and supplied it to several parishes, making in some cases a profit and in others a loss. It was held that for the purposes of income tax assessment each supply must be treated as a separate undertaking, and that losses could not be set off against profits (Wakefield R. D. C. v. Hall, [1912] 3 K. B. 328; 76 J. P. 437).

Rights of riparian owners.

(d) It will be seen that s. 332, post, prevents the water rights of proprietors from being injuriously affected without their consent; and although s. 176 enables the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act to be put in force, the accepted opinion seems to be that water rights cannot be purchased compulsorily. See note (b) to s. 176, post, and note (a) to s. 327, post, the evidence of Sir S. B. Provis before the Royal Commission on Market Rights and Tolls, Vol. II., Question 50, and the admission in argument in Roberts v. Gwyrfai R. D. C., infra; but see s. 14 of the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1919, under which power is given to acquire water rights in connection with housing schemes.

In Bush v. Trowbridge Waterworks Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Ch. 459; 39 J. P. 660, it was held that the abstraction by a waterworks company of water from a stream did not entitle a riparian owner below to require the company to purchase his interest in the stream, but only entitled him to compensation as for land injuriously affected. But when a company had power to divert the whole of a stream, and gave notice of their intention to do so, it was held that they were bound to purchase the entire interest of the riparian owners below (Stone v. Yeovil Corporation (1876), 2 C. P. D. 99; 42 J. P. 212, following Ferrand v. Corporation of Bradford (1856), 21 Beav. 412). It is to be observed that a riparian owner has merely a right to the use of the water as it passes through his property. He cannot divert it into a reservoir for the purpose of disposing of it to the inhabitants of a town (Swindon Waterworks Co. v. Wiltshire and Berkshire Canal Navigation Co. (1875), L. R. 7 H. L. 697; 40 J. P. 804; followed in McCartney v. Londonderry and Lough Swilley Rail Co., Ltd., [1904] A. C. 301). And a local authority possessing land on the bank of a stream have no greater right (Owen v. Davis, W. N. (1874) 175). An authority have no power, for the purpose of supplying water to their district, to alter the flow of water in a stream without the consent in writing of the lower riparian owners, as required by s. 322, post, for by so doing they are "injuriously affecting" the common law rights of such owners, and will be restrained from so doing without any proof of sensible damage (Roberts v. Gwyrfai R. D. C., [1899] 2 Ch. 608; 64 J. P. 52). A riparian owner cannot, except as against himself, confer on another person any right to use the water, and such user is wrongful if it affects the rights of other owners (Ormerod v. Todmorden Mill Co. (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 155; 47 J. P. 532; following Stockport Waterworks Co. v. Potter (1864), 3 H. & C. 300; 31 L. J. Ex. 9). Where however, the person using it returned it to the stream unaffected in quantity or quality, an injunction was refused (Kensit v. G. E. Rail. Co. (1884), 27 Ch. D. 122). An action by a local authority against a railway company to determine rights with regard to the abstraction of water from a river was postponed until the expiration of the war in Cardiff Corporation v. Barry Rail. Co. (1916), 85 L. J. Ch. 316; 80 J. P. 261.

As to rights in artificial watercourses, see Sutcliffe v. Booth (1863), 32 L. J. Q. B. 136; 27 J. P. 613; Burrows v. Lang, [1901] 2 Ch. 502; Baily v. Clark, [1902] 1 Ch. 649; Lewis v. Meredith, [1913] 1 Ch. 571, and cases therein cited, and cf. Remfry v. Natal (Surveyor-General), [1896] A. C. 558.

A canal company under a special Act acquired an undertaking for maintaining the navigation of the rivers D. and C. The water of the rivers was not expressly vested in them. The defendants owned land adjoining the C., and for more than twenty years had abstracted large quantities of water for railway purposes. In an action to restrain them from abstracting water in breach of the public rights in the navigation, the defendants disputed the canal company's ownership of the water; alternatively they set up a prescriptive right; but they disclaimed any right to interfere with the canal company's statutory powers and duties. It was held that, having regard to such disclaimer, the canal company having no property in the water had no title to sue; and that no question of prescription arose. But, had it done so, quære whether NEVILLE, J., was right in holding that the prescriptive claim was vitiated by the fact that the defendants had taken water for many years without saying that they were taking only surplus water, and therefore might have been taking water which was not superfluous (Att.-Gen. and Sheffield, etc. Navigation Co. v. G. N. Rail. Co., [1909] 1 Ch. 775; 73 J. P. 41).

Cases as to "compensation water."

Where a waterworks company were empowered by local Acts to take and use certain water on condition of their making a compensation reservoir for storing the water during floods for the benefit of millowners lower down, it was held that they were bound to return the water from such reservoir without fouling it (Clowes v. Staffordshire Potteries Co. (1872), L. R. 8 Ch. 125; 36 J. P. 760).

A local authority, predecessors in title of the defendants, were empowered by special Act to construct a reservoir, and for that purpose to divert a stream which fed a watercourse that flowed for some distance across the plaintiff's lands and supplied a company (his lessees) with water for the purposes of their works. The Act provided that the authority should permit "the owners, lessees and occupiers" of the works to take compensation water along the watercourse not exceeding a specified quantity "during any working day," and imposed liability in damages if the authority failed to permit the due quantity of compensation water to flow into the watercourse. In 1890 the company ceased to use their works and subsequently dismantled them and surrendered their lease. Meanwhile the watercourse gradually fell into disuse and disrepair, so that the water escaped and did not reach the site of the works; and in 1909 the defendants diverted the stream and prevented water from flowing into the watercourse. In an action by the plaintiff claiming a declaration of his right to the compensation water under the Act and an injunction to restrain the defendants from diverting or interfering with the flow of water to the watercourse, it was held, that on the true construction of the Act the grant of compensation water was to the plaintiff and others as "the owners lessees and occupiers" of the works, and was not limited as to the purposes for which the water was to be used; that "any working days" meant the days of the week other than Sundays and holidays; that the non-user of the compensation water whilst it was not wanted was not of itself evidence of any abandonment by the plaintiff of his rights, and that he was entitled to the uninterrupted flow of the specified quantity of compensation water to the site of the works; but that, as no present damage had resulted from the diversion of the water, an injunction would not be granted (Hanbury v. Llanfrechfa Upper U. D. C. (1911), 75 J. P. 307; 9 L. G. R. 360).

Note to Section 51.

A corporation were empowered by a local Act to construct and maintain certain waterworks and to appropriate certain streams and waters. The Act provided that as compensation for the taking of the water the corporation should cause to flow from a reservoir a specified quantity of water, and further provided that in case of neglect by or in consequence of which the compensation water should not so flow, "the corporation should for every day on which such neglect occurred forfeit and pay to the occupiers of each of the mills and works affected thereby (who might sue for and recover the same) the sum of five pounds, and should, in addition, make compensation for any loss, damage or injury sustained by such occupiers, or any of them, in respect of which such penalties were an insufficient compensation, and such occupiers might respectively from time to time recover such compensation . . . in any court of competent jurisdiction." Eight mill occupiers, alleging that by reason of neglect the specified quantity of water did not flow for a period of forty-three days, each claimed £215. It was proved that there was sufficient water in the reservoir to enable the corporation to send down the statutory quantity, and that the pipes, if not defective, were sufficient to carry down the water; that such pipes require care and attention from time to time, but that they had not been inspected for thirty years. It was held that the evidence established a primâ facie case of neglect, and cast upon the corporation the burden of proving that they had used reasonable care. It was also held that, in case of neglect, the corporation were liable to pay £5 per day to each of the occupiers of the mills, and that therefore each of the plaintiffs was entitled to recover the amount claimed (Beaumont and Others v. Huddersfield Corporation (1902), 67 J. P. 57; 19 T. L. R. 97). In a later case arising under the same local Act (which incorporated the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847) it was held that the provision for the payment of penalties was not punitive, but compensatory, and that the occupiers of mills could maintain an action in the High Court for the recovery of the penalties (Meltham Spinning Co., Ltd. v. Huddersfield Corporation (1903), 67 J. P. 445; 89 L. T. 403). See also a more recent case where the court held that the penalties were punitive and not compensatory, and that the justices might therefore reduce same under the S. J. A., 1879 (Davies-Cooke v. Hawarden and District Waterworks Co. (1907), 71 J. P. 223; 96 L. T. 906).

As to the effect of a covenant to keep "works" in repair in consideration of the grant of an easement to take water, see Evan-Thomas v. Neath Corporation (1912), 76 J. P. 397.

The Commissioners of Woods may with the consent of the Treasury release to or waive in favour of, any local authority any water rights exercisable by, or reserved to, the Crown (Crown Lands Act, 1894, s. 8).

As to abstraction from underground streams, see the notes to s. 17, ante, p. 73.

(e) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 34.

Contracts "for supply."

(f) A landowner supplying water to her own tenants, agreed with the rural authority to supply two villages upon the same terms upon which she supplied her tenants. In consequence, however, of a report by their medical officer, the authority entered into further negotiations with the landowner and with a neighbouring corporation in reference to the supply. The landowner then gave three months' notice to the consumers of water in the two villages (other than her tenants) that she would at the expiration of that time cease to supply them. The authority applied for an injunction against her, and proved that water could not be procured from wells in the district, and that a wholesome supply could only be otherwise procured from a long distance. NORTH, J., granted the injunction on the ground that the notice given was not reasonable under the circumstances (Hunslet Union (Guardians of) v. Ingram (1893), Times, March 27th). See also Earl Harrowby v. Leicester Corporation (1915), 80 J. P. 92; 14 L. G. R. 42. In that case there was a continuing contract to supply and take water determinable by notice in the event of the water becoming impure or unfit in the opinion of the L. G. B. The L. G. B. refused to determine the question. It was held that a decision by either the agreed arbitrator or some other properly qualified tribunal was a condition precedent to giving a valid notice.

Note to Section 51.

As to what constitutes conduct by a distributing authority possessing a monopoly to supply water within a district such as to amount to acquiescence or consent to supply within that district by a neighbouring authority, see Birr R. D. C. v. Birr U. D. C., [1915] 1 I. R. 413.

The L. G. B. expressed the opinion that a district council may, if they see fit, give a water company within whose area of supply their district is situate, a guarantee such as will ensure the receipt by the company of the minimum revenue recognised in s. 35 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and they may enter into contracts for the supply of water in pursuance of which specified payments may be made to the company.

If a loan is required for the construction of works dependent upon the supply of water under a contract with a company or authority it is essential that the supply should be guaranteed for a number of years. The term ordinarily allowed by the M. of H. for the repayment of loans for waterworks purposes, other than machinery, is thirty years.

Restriction on construction of waterworks by local authority.

52. Before commencing to construct waterworks (a) within the limits of supply of any water company empowered by Act of Parliament or any order confirmed by Parliament (b) to supply water, the local authority shall give written notice to every water company (c) within whose limits of supply the local authority are desirous of supplying water, stating the purposes for which and (as far as may be practicable) the extent to which water is required by the local authority.

It shall not be lawful for the local authority to construct any waterworks (a) within such limits if and so long as any such company are able and willing to supply water proper and sufficient for all reasonable purposes for which it is required by the local authority; and any difference as to whether the water which any such company are able and willing (d) to lay on is proper and sufficient for the purposes for which it is required, or whether the purposes for which it is required are reasonable (e), or (if and so far as the charges of the company are not regulated by Parliament) as to the terms of supply, shall be settled by arbitration in manner provided by this Act (f).

What works come within the section.

(a) See note (c) to last section. The word "waterworks" here means new waterworks, and does not apply to additions to or improvements of substantial waterworks previously existing, as, for instance, the construction of an additional reservoir (Cleveland Water Co. v. Redcar L. B., [1895] 1 Ch. 168; 59 J. P. 7). This decision was approved, but held inapplicable, in Huddersfield Corporation v. Ravensthorpe U. D. C., [1897] 2 Ch. 121; 61 J. P. 596. In that case an authority with an existing waterworks system, having had an area added to their district by order of the county council, proceeded to lay pipes for the supply of such area. It was held that this was a constructing of waterworks within the meaning of the section, so that notice should have been given to the plaintiffs whose limits of supply included the added area, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction. In the order of the county council, no express provision was made as to the supply of water in the added area. This might possibly have been made. See Brighton Intercepting and Outfall Sewers Board v. Hove Corporation (1904), 68 J. P. 565; 20 T. L. R. 760). The section does not apply to the construction of works by an authority for the supply of water for their own use, as for flushing sewers (West Surrey Water Co. v. Guardians of Chertsey Union, [1894] 3 Ch. 513; 58 J. P. 167).

Note to Section 52.

(b) In the P. H. A., 1848, s. 75, the word established only was used, and though the law officers of the Crown had advised that this meant established by Act of Parliament, that opinion had not been judicially confirmed. The text, however, confirms that view for the future. It is presumed that the Act of Parliament referred to is a special Act, and that the Order is a Provisional Order under the Gas and Waterworks Facilities Acts respectively applying to the particular company.

The undertaking of a water company was transferred by statute to a borough. The profits of the waterworks were under a later Act to be transferred to the borough improvement fund, or, at the option of the corporation, applied in reducing the price of water. It was held that the corporation were supplying water for their own profit, and were a "water company" within the meaning of this section (Wolverhampton Corporation v. Bilston (Commissioners of), [1891] 1 Ch. 315). This point was not argued, however, in the Court of Appeal (7 T. L. R. 374). It would appear that the Metropolitan Water Board are not a company trading for profit. See M. W. B. v. Barton, [1921] 1 Ch. 299; 90 L. J. Ch. 57.

Notice, when necessary.

(c) See s. 266 as to this notice. If notice be not given, the authority will be liable to an injunction.

The water company must be such a company as is previously mentioned in the section, for only such a company can be said to have limits of supply.

In many cases companies have been established for the supply of water, but have not acted on their powers, or have failed to carry their powers into effect. Nevertheless, it seems that notice should be given to them. Modern Acts and Orders, however, empowering companies to supply water within specified limits, provide that if within a limited period the company have not provided, or are not prepared on demand to provide a water supply the authority shall be freed from the restrictions imposed by s. 52.

"Able and willing" to supply water.

(d) A company is not able and willing within the meaning of this section, unless it has both the necessary powers and the necessary supply of water. The R. company had the necessary powers, but no water, and the S. company had the necessary water, but no powers within the district. The R. company sold its plant to the S. company, and certain members of company S. bought all the shares of company R. with the intention of allowing company S. to exercise the powers of company R. It was held that the powers could not be so delegated, and that neither company was able and willing within the meaning of the Act (Richmond Waterworks Co. v. Vestry of Richmond (1876), 3 Ch. D. 82). In Newhaven and Seaford Water Co. v. Newhaven L. B. (L. T. Journ. (1882), p. 226), HALL, V.-C., held that a company were "able and willing," within the meaning of this section, though their works were only in progress, and they had no completed works available for the supply of water. It seems doubtful whether the ability and willingness of the company is a question which the arbitrators under the section have jurisdiction to decide (Bognor Water Co. v. Bognor L. B. (1894), 70 L. T. 402, and see Re Yeadon L. B. and Yeadon Waterworks Co. (1889), 41 Ch. D. 52; reversing 59 L. T. 844).

Arbitration;

(e) The arbitrator must determine what are reasonable purposes. The term is in itself somewhat vague.

(f) See s. 179, post. The plaintiffs' special Act rendered it unlawful for the defendant board to construct waterworks within the plaintiffs' limits of supply during four years after the passing of the Act, so long as the plaintiffs were able and willing to supply water proper and sufficient. The plaintiffs made some unsuccessful attempts to find water, and before they succeeded, the defendants served them with notice of their intention to construct waterworks under the P. H. A., 1875, unless they were informed within one month that the plaintiffs were able and willing to supply the water. The matter went to arbitration, but the company, finding that the board were still forwarding a scheme of water supply, moved for an injunction to restrain them from commencing or threatening to construct works, and from proceeding to arbitration. The motion stood over to await the award, which was given in favour of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the defendants must pay the costs of the action, setting off any costs incurred by them by reason of the plaintiffs seeking to restrain the arbitration (Bognor Water Co. v. Bognor L. B., supra).

Section 53.

As to construction of reservoirs.

53. At least two months (a) before commencing to construct under the provisions of this Act (b) any reservoir (other than a service reservoir or tank which will hold not more than one hundred thousand gallons (c)) the local authority shall give notice (d) of the intended work by advertisement in one or more of the local newspapers circulated within the district where the reservoir is to be constructed (e).

If any person who would be affected by the intended work objects to such work, and serves notice in writing of such objection on the local authority (f) at any time within the said two months, the intended work shall not be commenced without the sanction of the Local Government Board, after such inquiry as hereinafter mentioned, unless such objection is withdrawn (g).

The Local Government Board may, on application (h) of the local authority, appoint an inspector to make inquiry (i) on the spot into the propriety of the intended work and into the objections thereto, and to report to the Local Government Board on the matters with respect to which such inquiry was directed; and on receiving the report of such inspector, the Local Government Board may make an order disallowing or allowing with such modifications (if any) as they may deem necessary the intended work (k).

(a) I.e., calendar months; see 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 3. The section does not prevent the authority purchasing land for the purpose. As, however, the land would be useless if an objection were sustained to the erection of a reservoir thereon, such a course is inadvisable, and the M. of H. would probably not sanction a loan for the purchase until the section had been satisfied.

(b) Presumably these words are to be construed so as to apply to powers acquired before the Act was passed (see s. 326, post), but the point is far from clear.

(c) See the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, in App. I., post, Vol. II., for provisions as to the protection of reservoirs. See also s. 68, post, p. 146. An enlargement of an existing service reservoir whereby it will hold a total volume of more than 100,000 gallons may be regarded as the construction of a new reservoir for the purposes of the section, and notices should be given.

(d) See as to this notice, ss. 266, 267, post. If this notice be not given, proceedings may be stayed by injunction, and the expenditure would be unlawful. If the land had not been already obtained, probably it could not be legally acquired.

(e) Generally the newspaper circulating in the district of the local authority will suffice, but if the reservoir is to be out of the district, it may be necessary to advertise in a different newspaper.

(f) Section 267 provides for the service of notices, but appears to apply rather to notices by the local authority than to notices to them. The person affected must, as it seems, be so affected in his land or some interest therein.

(g) Although there be no notice of objection, if the local authority require a loan, they must obtain the sanction of the M. of H. and furnish due proofs of compliance with the section. This sanction will not be given without due inquiry. See s. 233, post, and the notes thereon.

(h) This application (which should be deferred until the two months have expired) should be made in writing, signed by the clerk, and the following particulars must be furnished: A copy of a resolution of the authority directing the application, a copy of the newspaper containing the advertisement of the notice, and copies of the notices of objection served on the council.

(i) As to inquiries by the M. of H., see s. 293, post.

(k) It does not appear that this order can deal with the interests of persons affected by the works, but their interests may be such as to cause the Department to disallow the proposal.

Section 54.

Powers of carrying mains.

54. Where a local authority supply water within their district, they shall have the same powers and be subject to the same restrictions for carrying water mains within or without their district (a) as they have and are subject to for carrying sewers within or without their district respectively by the law for the time being in force (b).

As to the distinction between "mains" and "service pipes," see Whittington Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, [1914] 2 Ch. 146; 78 J. P. 379.

(a) These words enable the water to be brought from any distance to the district.

(b) See s. 16, ante, p. 55, as to sewers within the district, and ss. 32 et seq., ante, p. 94, as to sewers without the district. See also Jones v. Conway and Colwyn Bay Joint Water Supply Board, ante, p. 60, as to water mains without the district; and see as to the powers conferred by this section, East Molesey L. B. v. Lambeth Waterworks Co., [1892] 3 Ch. 289; Hill v. Wallasey L. B., cited in the notes to s. 57, post, p. 132, and Metropolitan Water Board v. L. B. & S. C. Ry. Co., [1915] 2 K. B. 297; 79 J. P. 337, cited in the notes to s. 16, ante, p. 59.

As to supply of water

55. A local authority shall provide and keep in any waterworks constructed or purchased by them a supply of pure and wholesome water (a); and where a local authority lay any pipes for the supply of any of the inhabitants of their district, the water may be constantly laid on at such pressure as will carry the same to the top storey of the highest dwelling-house within the district or part of the district supplied (b).

"Pure and wholesome" supply obligatory.

(a) This is compulsory upon the authority, and as to their default herein, see s. 299, post. Compare also the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 35. As to the purposes for which the authority are bound to supply water, see the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 53, and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, ss. 12, 13. These sections are set out in App. I., post, Vol. II.

The defendants were empowered by special Act incorporating (with the exception of certain provisions) the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, to supply water for domestic use within the limits and from the sources described by the Act. By the Act the defendants were entitled to prescribe the material to be used for service pipes by persons supplied with water, and by byelaws they prescribed that the material might either be lead or cast-iron. Service pipes of lead were, upon the application and at the expense of the plaintiff and his landlord, laid down by the defendants from their mains to the plaintiff's house. The service pipes when laid belonged to the consumer of the water supplied through them. By the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 35, "the undertakers shall provide and keep in the pipes to be laid down by them a supply of pure and wholesome water, sufficient for the domestic use of all the inhabitants of the town or district within the limits of the special Act, who . . . shall be entitled to demand a supply, and shall be willing to pay water rate for the same." Water which was pure and wholesome in the mains of the defendants, was supplied by them to the plaintiff, but in its passage through the service pipes it was contaminated by the lead, and he contracted lead poisoning. In an action against the defendants for injuries sustained from impure and unwholesome water:—Held, that he had no cause of action (Milnes v. Huddersfield Corporation (1886), 11 App. Cas. 511; 50 J. P. 676).

As to the mode of enforcing the duty of a water company to supply pure water, see Att.-Gen. v. North Shields Waterworks Co., Times, May 12th, 1892; Att.-Gen. v. Rhymney and Aber Valleys Gas and Water Co. (1907), 71 J. P. 435: Att.-Gen. v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co., [1908] 1 Ch. 388; 72 J. P. 48).

"Constant high-pressure" discretionary.

(b) It is, however, in the discretion of the authority whether they will act upon this provision, and they will be guided by the state of the district, and the facilities for obtaining water, so as to be able to raise it to the requisite height. It is to be observed that the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 35 and 42, as to high pressure are not incorporated in this Act. The authority are not, therefore, under any obligation to supply water at high pressure by reason of those sections. See Purnell v. Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co. (1861), 10 C. B. (N.S.) 576. In Finchley L. B. v. Barnet District Gas and Water Co., Times, February 9th, 1893, a question arose as to the liability of a water company to keep water constantly laid on. The special Acts of the company incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1863, so far as applicable, and provided that the water need not be constantly laid on under pressure, except that on the application of a local authority the company might be required to provide a constant supply within so much of their district as could be supplied from their reservoir, but not higher than 300 feet above the ordnance datum level. It was contended that this provision did not relieve the company from the liability imposed by ss. 35, 37, 42 of the Act of 1847 of supplying water at high pressure for domestic purposes and for use at fires. But it was held that the case of Purnell v. Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co., supra, was a direct authority to show that words such as those used in the special Act exempted a company from keeping a supply under pressure for fire purposes; that the principle underlying such decision showed that the exemption extended also to the keeping of a constant supply; and that under the local Acts, if the plaintiff board desired to have water for fire always laid on, they could secure it by entering into the necessary agreements and making the prescribed payments. See also Liverpool Corporation v. Brady (1897), 14 T. L. R. 11.

It has been held that the statutory requirements as to the supply of water at pressure contained in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 35, do not apply to the supply of water in bulk, and that the duty of a waterworks company ended with the supply of water at a given point (Wombwell U. D. C. v. Dearne Valley Waterworks Co. (1907), 71 J. P. 415; 5 L. G. R. 1132). In Morpeth Corporation v. Tynemouth Corporation (1916), 80 J. P. 75; 14 L. G. R. 182, however, this case was distinguished.

In that case the question arose upon the construction of an agreement as to whether the connection should be at pressure by a direct connection to a gravitation main as was contended by the plaintiffs, or by supply through the plaintiffs' service reservoir as was contended by the defendants. It was held on the construction of the agreement that the plaintiffs were entitled to supply in bulk through a direct connection with the defendant's gravitation main.

In Kyffin v. East London Water Co., [1896] 1 Q. B. 446; 60 J. P. 230, it was held that upon a true construction of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, it was for the metropolitan authority of the district, and not for an individual householder, to proceed for penalties under the Act. A householder aggrieved by an insufficient water supply could only recover penalties under s. 43 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847.

Power to charge water rates and rents.

56. Where a local authority supply water to any premises they may (a) charge in respect of such supply a water rate (b) to be assessed on the net annual value (c) of the premises ascertained in the manner by this Act prescribed with respect to general district rates (d); moreover they may enter into agreements (e) for supplying water on such terms as may be agreed on between them and the persons receiving the supply, and shall have the same powers for recovering water rents or other payments accruing under such agreements as they have for recovering water rates (f).

Power of ratepayers to require water rates or water rents to be charged.

(a) But by the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, s. 10, post, "where a sanitary authority under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, as amended by this Act, supply water in any urban district or in any contributory place, and an application is made to them by any ten persons rated to the relief of the poor in such urban district, or by any five persons so rated in such contributory place, to charge water rates or water rents in respect of the water so supplied, it shall be incumbent upon the authority to exercise the powers given to them by the Public Health Act, 1875, and by this Act, of charging water rates or water rents in respect of all water supplied by them in such urban district or in such contributory place." But consumers cannot dictate to the authority whether the charge shall take the form of a rent or a rate. See a county court case in Local Government Chronicle, 1912, p. 766, where a consumer who considered that rates ought to be charged instead of rents, refused to sign any agreement, but was held liable to pay for water used by him as upon an implied agreement to pay a reasonable price for it. As to the power of an authority to charge rates or rents in respect of water supplied from standpipes, see ss. 9, 11 of the same Act, post.

Note to Section 56.

How far rates need be equal or uniform.

(b) The N. Corporation purchased the undertaking of the N. Waterworks Co. under a local Act which empowered them to charge for the supply of water for domestic use to any dwelling-house a sum not exceeding 7½ per cent. per annum on the net rateable value of such dwelling-house. The company's special Act provided that "the company may from time to time supply any person with water for any purpose for which such supply may be required, for such remuneration, and upon such terms and conditions, as shall be agreed upon between the company and the person desirous of having such supply of water, under a special agreement," and this power was transferred to the corporation. There was no express provision in either Act requiring equality of rating in respect of the supply of water. The corporation charged for the supply for domestic purposes at the rate of 7½ per cent. upon the net rateable value of the dwelling-houses in one part of their district, and at the rate of 5 per cent. in another part. It was held that they were not bound to charge at an equal rate in the pound to all consumers (Northampton Corporation v. Ellen, [1904] 1 K. B. 299; 68 J. P. 197).

Notwithstanding the above decision, the M. of H. appear to consider that in a rural district a water rate levied under s. 10 of the Act of 1878 should, throughout any one contributory place, be a uniform assessment on the net annual value of the premises supplied with water, ascertained by the valuation list. They do not, however, consider it necessary that the water rates should be on precisely the same scale in the several contributory places.

See note (e) as to allowing discount for prompt payment of water rates.

"Net annual value."

(c) See the definition of net annual value in s. 4, ante, p. 15. This definition precludes the difficulties of construction which arose as to the meaning of annual value in Warrington Waterworks Co. v. Longshaw (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 145; 46 J. P. 773; New River Co. v. Mather (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 442; 39 J. P. 614; Dobbs v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co. (1883), 9 App. Cas. 49; 48 J. P. 5; South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. v. Barrow (1897), 61 J. P. 661, and Woking Water and Gas Co. v. Parker, [1916] 1 K. B. 473; 80 J. P. 188. And see the cases cited in the notes to 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 68, in App. I., post, Vol. II. For the calculation of the annual value where an owner is assessed, see Smith v. Birmingham (Corporation of) (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 195; 47 J. P. 645. As to alterations in "value" during a quarter, see Metropolitan Water Board v. Phillips, [1913] A. C. 86; 77 J. P. 73.

(d) As to the manner prescribed, see s. 211, post.

Amount of rate.

In Worcester Corporation v. Droitwich Assessment Committee (1876), 2 Ex. D. 47, 60; 41 J. P. 355, which was decided with reference to the P. H. A., 1848, MELLISH, L.J., said: "We think that the corporation in making a water rate are bound to make an estimate of the sum they actually require for the maintenance of their waterworks, and cannot legally levy a larger sum by a water rate than the sum they so require." But notwithstanding this dictum, it is submitted that an authority may out of the water rates pay all or part of the expense of providing as well as maintaining the waterworks and of repaying instalments of principal and interest of money borrowed for the purpose of providing the supply. This view is confirmed by the language of s. 229, post, defining special expenses. The L. G. B. stated that in their opinion the cost of a scheme of water supply may, and should as far as practicable, be thrown upon the consumers of the water by the charge of either water rates or water rents. The Worcester Case, supra, was discussed and distinguished in Hanly v. Sligo R. D. C., [1918] 2 I. R. 280. It would seem that there is no statutory limit to the amount of the water rate under s. 56. When, however, water is laid on to premises under compulsory procedure the provisions of s. 62, post, p. 137, and of s. 8 of the P. H. (Water) Act, 1878, post, apply. See also Horn v. Sleaford R. D. C., [1898] 2 Q. B. 358; 62 J. P. 502, and other cases to note (g), s. 229, post.

Note to Section 56.

(e) These should be in writing and under seal except in urban districts where the amount does not exceed £50, in which case the seal is unnecessary. See per Lord BRAMWELL in Young v. Leamington Corporation (1883), 8 App. Cas. 517, 522; 47 J. P. 660. As to stamping agreement, see West Middlesex Waterworks Co. v. Suwerkropp (1829), 4 C. & P. 87; Gurr v. Scudds (1855), 11 Ex. 190; Stamp Act, 1891, Sched. 1, exemption of agreement for sale of goods; and County of Durham Electrical Co. v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1909] 2 K. B. 604; 73 J. P. 425, where it was held that an agreement for the supply of electric power for a term of years on payment of a fixed charge per quarter and also one penny per unit is a security for a sum of money at stated periods, and chargeable with duty at the rate of 2*s.* 6*d.* per cent. on the aggregate amount of the minimum annual payments.

Agreements for supply.

In Ilkeston Corporation v. Fretwell (1916), 80 J. P. N. 4, a supply free of cost for all time for farming purposes had been granted by a water company, predecessors of the plaintiffs to the defendants' predecessor in title. The defendant occupied the farmhouse as a private residence and claimed that the grant covered his use for domestic purposes. It was held that the grant of a supply for farming purposes did not include a supply for domestic purposes to the farmhouse now used as a private residence.

The L. G. B. once stated that where water was supplied by agreement and paid for by a water rent, there did not appear to be anything to prevent the district council from including in the agreement a stipulation that if the rent were paid before a specified date a deduction or discount should be allowed; but that where the water was not supplied by agreement, and payment for it was made by means of a water rate assessed on the net annual value of the premises supplied, such an arrangement would not be applicable.

See s. 58, post, p. 133, as to agreements to supply water by measure.

(f) See next section. Observe the distinction between water rents which are payable under a special agreement, and water rates which are chargeable on the net annual value of the premises without any such agreement. Another example of a water rent will be found in s. 58, post, p. 133.

Incorporation of certain provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Acts.

57. For the purpose of enabling any local authority to supply water there shall be incorporated with this Act the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (a), and the following provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (b); (namely,)

"With respect" (where the local authority have not the control of the street) (c) "to the breaking up of streets for the purpose of laying pipes"; (d) and

"With respect to the communication pipes to be laid by the undertakers"; and

"With respect to the communication pipes to be laid by the inhabitants"; and

"With respect to waste or misuse of the water supplied by the undertakers"; and

"With respect to the provision for guarding against fouling the water of the undertakers"; and

"With respect to the payment and recovery of the water rates" (e).

Provided—

That the provisions with respect to the communication pipes to be laid by the undertakers and the inhabitants respectively shall apply only in districts or parts of districts where the local authority lay any pipes for the supply of any of the inhabitants thereof; and

That any dispute authorised or directed by any of the said incorporated provisions to be settled by an inspector or two justices shall be settled by a court of summary jurisdiction; (f) and

Section 57.

That section forty-four of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (g), shall for the purposes of this Act have effect as if the words "with the consent in writing of the owner or reputed owner of any such house, or of the agent of such owner," were omitted therefrom; and any rent for pipes and works paid by an occupier under that section may be deducted by him from any rent from time to time due from him to such owner (h).

(a) That is 26 & 27 Vict. c. 93. See the statute in App. I., post, Vol. II.

(b) That is 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, ss. 28—34, 44—53, 54—60, 61—67, and 68—74. These sections are printed in App. I., post, Vol. II. With respect to the incorporation of parts of Acts by reference to the heading, see Ferrar v. Commissioners of Sewers of London (1869), L. R. 4 Ex. 227; Hammersmith Rail. Co. v. Brand (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 171; 30 J. P. 37; Dungey v. London Corporation (1869), 38 L. J. C. P. 298; R. v. St. Luke's Chelsea (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B. 148; 36 J. P. 245; McEwan v. Perth (1905), 7 F. 714; Fletcher v. Birkenhead Corporation, [1907] 1 K. B. 205; 71 J. P. 111.

Power of authority to make regulations.

On the subject of the powers of both urban and rural district councils to make regulations with respect to the supply of water by them, the M. of H. have pointed out that district councils are not empowered to make regulations enforceable by penalties. The Ministry draw attention, however, to the fact that s. 57 of the P. H. A., 1875, incorporates certain provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act of 1847, as well as the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, and that the provisions thus incorporated enable a district council to control in many important particulars the fittings and apparatus on the premises supplied by them with water. As examples, the Ministry refer to s. 48 of the Act of 1847, which gives the council power to approve of the strength and material of the communication pipes to be laid by the owner or occupier of a dwelling-house; s. 49, which provides for the proper superintendence by their officer of the work of connecting these pipes with the pipes belonging to the council; and s. 50, which enables them to prescribe a maximum limit to the bore of service pipes. For the prevention of waste or misuse of the water supplied by the council, effectual provision has, the Ministry observe, been made in such enactments as ss. 54—60 of the Act of 1847, and ss. 16—20 of the Act of 1863, while the powers of inspection conferred by such provisions as those in s. 57 of the Act of 1847 and s. 15 of the Act of 1863 may be expected to afford the council a ready means of ascertaining whether each of the persons whom they may supply with water complies with the requirements of the statutes.

Where district councils contemplate making regulations in the matter, the Ministry think that the council might be advised to draw up an abstract from the provisions above referred to, or series of extracts from them. To this abstract or selection of sections they might with advantage append a description of the fittings which in their opinion would satisfy the requirements of the Acts. No approval or confirmation of such abstract or extracts on the part of the Ministry is required, or could be given by them.

Power to break open private streets.

(c) These words are descriptive of an authority who have not the control of the streets generally in their district. The plaintiff was the owner of a private road in the urban district of the defendants, who had the control of the streets generally in the district, and also the power of supplying the inhabitants with water. The defendants commenced, without the plaintiff's consent, to break up his private road for the purpose of laying down water mains:—Held, as above, by the Court of Appeal (A. L. SMITH, L.J., diss.), and that the defendants had power under ss. 16 and 54 to lay down pipes in the plaintiff's private road without his consent, making him compensation under s. 308 (Hill v. Wallasey L. B., [1894] 1 Ch. 133). Since the passing of the L. G. A., 1894, under which rural district councils became highway authorities, the words in question have little, if any, application.

The M. of H. consider that apart from some special statutory authority private persons and companies have no power to break up public highways even with the consent of the district council; but see as to this, Edgware Highway Board v. Harrow District Gas Co. and cases cited therewith on pp. 284, 285, post.

Note to Section 57.

(d) A water company having laid a pipe under the surface of a highway, a leak occurred and the water oozed out. A builder, who had contracted with the owner of the soil of the highway and of the adjoining lands, to make a tunnel under the road, was delayed in his work and suffered damage by reason of the leakage. It was held that (assuming the owner could have maintained an action for damage to his property) the builder's loss of profit on his contract gave him no right of action against the company (Cattle v. Stockton Waterworks Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 453; 39 J. P. 791). And see the cases cited in the notes to s. 19, ante, p. 77. Liability for leaking pipes.

For a case decided under the Metropolitan Water Board (Various Powers) Act, 1907, as to the liability to pay for reinstatement of the roadway after a leakage had been found by the water authority in the communication pipes of a consumer, the opening up for investigation having been done by the authority, see David v. M. W. B. (1918), 16 L. G. R. 854; 35 T. L. R. 9.

(e) Provision for the recovery of water rates is found in 26 & 27 Vict. c. 93, s. 21, in addition to those in 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17. It has been held that, notwithstanding the incorporation of the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, as to the recovery of water rates, a water rent due under an agreement for supply of water is a "rate made under this Act" within the meaning of s. 256, post, and that the period of limitation applicable to the recovery thereof commences to run on a failure to pay within fourteen days after demand (Elliott v. Russell, [1902] 2 K. B. 748; 67 J. P. 158). Recovery of water rates and rents

(g) See App. I., post, Vol. II.

(h) Query whether this will overrule any covenants by lessees to bear charges leviable upon lessors, as to which see notes on ss. 104, 226, post. The language is only permissive, and may, possibly, be provided for by express covenant. As to whether the deduction must be made from the next rent due, see note on s. 214, post.

58. A local authority may agree with any person to supply water by measure, and as to the payment to be made in the form of rent (a) or otherwise for every meter provided by them; they shall at all times at their own expense keep all meters and other instruments for measuring water let by them for hire to any person in proper order for correctly registering the supply of water, and in default of their so doing such person shall not be liable to pay rent for the same during such time as such default continues. The local authority shall for the purposes aforesaid have access to and be at liberty at all reasonable times to remove test inspect and replace any such meter or other instrument. Power to supply water by measure

(a) This agreement must provide for the payments for the supply of the water, for the use of the meter, and for the penalties in respect of the breaches mutually. It does not appear that there is any summary means of recovering the rent for the meter, but the amount due from time to time will be dealt with as rent due between landlord and tenant, and must be recovered by the ordinary civil process, though apparently there cannot be any distress. The agreement.

This provision for the supply of water by measure was new, so far as the previous sanitary Acts went, though it is found in many local water Acts.

The S. water company were authorised to receive payment by measure, and not by a rate, for water supplied to fixed baths in private houses. There was no express provision in their special Acts or in the Waterworks Clauses Acts as to how the water for such a purpose was to be measured, or whether the company or the consumer was to bear the cost of providing a meter; but by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, s. 14, when the company supply water by measure, they may let to a consumer a meter for such remuneration as they may agree upon:—Held, that a consumer taking water for a fixed bath in his private house, was bound at his own Cost of providing meter.

Note to Section 58.

expense to measure the water so used by some automatic and self-registering meter or other instrument, or in some other equally accurate way, and to record the amount from time to time taken (Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Bingham (1884), 25 Ch. D. 443, followed in Dublin (Corporation of) v. Bray Commissioners, [1900] 2 I. R. 88). PEARSON, J., who decided Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Bingham, supra, expressly distinguished it from Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Carter, and The Same v. Brooks (1882), 8 Q. B. D. 632; 46 J. P. 548. In the first of these cases the facts were as follows: The special Act provided for the supply of water for "family use" at certain rates calculated on the rental of the house supplied. It contained further provisions for the supply of water to schools, manufactories, etc., and for purposes other than family consumption, and for baths, etc., and for the purposes of any trade or business whatsoever, at certain rates per thousand gallons. The supply of water having been held obligatory upon the company unless prevented by causes beyond their control, it was held that, there being no provision in the special Act throwing upon the consumer the obligation of providing a meter to measure the water supplied for the purposes of a bath, no such obligation could be implied from s. 14 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (supra), incorporated with the special Act. In the second case the occupier of a house had a bath connected by means of a pipe with the house cistern, to which water was conveyed from the main for family use. The company required him to put up a meter for the purpose of measuring the water used for the bath, but he refused to do so. He had paid to the company in advance the proper amount in respect of the water supplied for family use for the quarter ending September 29th, but had not paid or tendered any sum in respect of the water supply to the bath for the same period. The company, in consequence of his refusal to put up a meter or disconnect the bath, cut off the communication pipe from the main to his house upon September 20th. On September 29th, having cut off the pipe connecting the cistern with the bath, but not the waste or outlet pipe from the bath, he gave notice to the company of what he had done, and paid to them in advance the proper amount for the supply of water for family use during the ensuing quarter, but did not restore the communication pipe between the main and his cistern. The company refused to restore the supply, on the ground that he had not cut off the waste pipe from the bath, which he refused to do. The supply of water was not renewed till November 4th, when the company restored the communication pipe under protest. It was held that the company was not entitled to insist on the consumers providing a meter, but that they were not liable to a penalty under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 43, for not supplying water during the period from September 20th to September 29th, inasmuch as no tender or payment in respect of the water supply to the bath for such period had been made. But it was held that they were liable to a penalty in respect to the period subsequent to September 29th: that they had no right to refuse the supply of water after that date, and that they were not justified in cutting off the supply, and were, therefore, not entitled to require the consumer to renew the communication. These cases show that the agreement to supply water by measure under the above section must contain express stipulations, as to the provision and rent of the meter. In the absence of such stipulations, it is submitted that the consumer cannot be compelled to provide or to pay rent for a meter, though he may be bound to provide some automatic and self-registering instrument to keep a record of the water used. And see Weaver v. Cardiff (Corporation of) (1883), 48 L. T. 906.

For a case where a covenant to give a free supply to a "a farm house" was held determined by its conversion into a mansion, see Hadham R. D. C. v. Crallan, [1914] 2 Ch. 138.

For a case where a contract to take water by meter was implied from the circumstances as to the supply in the past, see Trowbridge Water Co. v. Wilts C. C., [1909] 1 K. B. 824; 73 J. P. 280.

In Gt. Northern Rail. Co. v. Bradford Corporation (1919), 83 J. P. 33; 17 L. G. R. 1, it was held that where a railway company has obtained a supply of water by meter to a railway station this does not authorise the use of part of the supply for another railway station.

As to the stamping of such agreements, see note (e) to s. 56, p. 131, ante.

See Stanley Bros. v. Nuneaton Corporation (1913), 77 J. P. 349, for a case where customers having under a mistake as to the effect of an agreement paid too high a price for water failed to recover the excess.

Note to Section 58.

When water is supplied by measure it is the subject of larceny (Ferens v. O'Brien (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 21; 47 J. P. 472).

Larceny of water.

59. Where water is supplied by measure by any local authority, the register of the meter or other instrument for measuring water shall be primâ facie evidence of the quantity of water consumed; and if the local authority and the consumer differ with respect to the quantity consumed, the difference shall be determined, on the application of either party, by a court of summary jurisdiction (a), and such court may order by which of the parties the costs of the proceedings before them shall be paid, and its decision shall be final and binding (b).

Register of meter to be evidence

(a) See the definition, ante, p. 36. In the supply of electricity under the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899, clause 57 of the Schedule provides that an electric inspector shall be appointed for the settlement of disputes as to meter registrations. In Hendon Electric Supply Co. v. Banks (1918), 82 J. P. 228; 16 L. G. R. 68, it was held that failure to appoint an inspector deprived the plaintiffs of their cause of action for debt for electricity supplied.

(b) These costs will be a civil debt within the meaning of the S. J. A., 1879, ss. 6, 35, 47, and payment of them may be enforced accordingly. See s. 251, and the notes thereon, post.

60. If any person wilfully or by culpable negligence injures or suffers to be injured any meter or fittings belonging to a local authority, or fraudulently alters the index to any meter, or prevents any meter from duly registering the quantity of water supplied, or fraudulently abstracts or uses water of the local authority, he shall (without prejudice to any other right or remedy of the local authority) be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings (a), and the local authority may, in addition thereto, recover the amount of any damage sustained (b). The existence of artificial means, under the control of the consumer, for causing any such alteration prevention abstraction or use shall be evidence (c) that the consumer has fraudulently effected the same.

Penalty for injuring meters.

(a) See, as to the recovery of penalties, s. 251, post. The authority may have some other right or remedy under the agreement, as to which see s. 58 and note (a) thereto. There may, too, be a criminal remedy for larceny of the water under certain circumstances. See Ferens v. O'Brien, supra.

(b) The amount of the damage is not a penalty, and payment of it will apparently have to be enforced as a civil debt under the S. J. A., 1879, if it is recovered at the same time and in the same proceeding, as the section appears to intend.

(c) This is only primâ facie, not conclusive, evidence or proof.

61. Any local authority for the time being supplying water within their own district may, with the sanction of the Local Government Board, supply water to the local authority of any adjoining (a) district on such terms as may be agreed on between such authorities, or as, in case of dispute (b), may be settled by arbitration in manner provided by this Act.

Power to supply water to authority of adjoining district.

(a) As to the meaning of the word "adjoining," as used in s. 150, see Cave v. Horsell, and other cases cited therewith in notes to that section, p. 302, post; and see also Haynes v. King, [1893] 3 Ch. 439; 69 L. T. 855, and Wellington Corporation v. Lower Hutt Corporation, [1904] A. C. 773, where the Privy Council considered the expression "adjacent borough . . . or district," and held that it was not confined to districts actually contiguous. The L. G. B., however, as well as their successors, the Ministry of Health, have always held a rigid view that the word adjoining in s. 61 means actually contiguous. The defect would have been dealt with in the Administrative Provisions Bill of 1921 if that Bill had passed.

"Adjoining."

Note to Section 61.

Effect of the section.

In Halifax Corporation v. Soothill Upper L. B. (1874), 31 L. T. 6, a corporation were empowered to collect all the water from the gathering grounds of a district, but were bound to supply to the township of T. not less than 25,000 gallons, nor more than 75,000 gallons per day at a fixed price, the amount (between the maximum and the minimum) to be at the option of the purchaser. It was held that T. might call for more than 25,000 gallons per day for the purpose of selling part of it at a profit to a neighbouring township.

The above case was decided before the present Act came into operation, and the foregoing section, which was altogether new, recognises the power of one authority to supply another with water. It was the view of the L. G. B. that the section only applied when the works of the supplying authority were provided and carried on under the Public Health Acts. The Ministry of Health now hold, however, that the section gives an additional power to local authorities having water undertakings regulated by a local Act enabling them, unless there is an express prohibition in that local Act to supply an adjoining authority with the sanction of the Ministry. Any application to the Ministry must be made by the clerk, who should forward a copy of the resolution directing it and a copy of the draft agreement between the two authorities. This agreement, when sanction has been obtained, should be under seal. The section only requires the sanction of the Board to the fact of the supply, and not to the terms of the agreement (although these are considered), and it empowers the Ministry to give a limited sanction, i.e., for a supply to part of an authority's district, in which case a fresh sanction must be obtained, if it be desired to supply a larger part of the district (Soothill Upper U. D. C. v. Wakefield R. D. C., [1905] 2 Ch. 516; 69 J. P. 447). It was in the last-mentioned case also decided that an agreement to supply water in specified quantities to a district does not imply necessarily an agreement to supply water at such a pressure as will give a continuous supply at all parts of the district.

If the council receiving the supply propose to borrow money with the sanction of the M. of H. for works of distribution, it is very important that in the agreement they should secure a right to receive the water for a definite term of years, not less than the period proposed for the repayment of the loan.

It will be observed that the water must be supplied to the authority of the "adjoining" district, and not directly to particular consumers in that district.

As to the spot at which a supply is deemed to be given and taken by a company and consumer respectively, see Att.-Gen. v. West Gloucestershire Water Co., on p. 120, ante. See also Morpeth Corporation v. Tynemouth Corporation, ante, p. 129.

In Halifax Corporation v. Morley Corporation (1894), 10 T. L. R. 454, the defendants' special Act provided that they should not either directly or indirectly supply any water, nor enter into any contract whereby water might be either directly or indirectly supplied or used within the water supply limits of the plaintiffs, nor within any place within which water was at the time of the passing of the special Act either directly or indirectly supplied by the plaintiffs. The defendants supplied water to the works of a railway company within the district of a rural authority who supplied within their own district water obtained by them from a local board which received its supply from the plaintiffs, and was so receiving it at the time of the passing of the defendants' special Act. It was held that the action of the defendants in supplying the railway company was contrary to their Act. See also Seton v. Linlithgow Burgh Commissioners (1900), 37 Sc. L. R. 715.

In Tynemouth Corporation v. Newbiggin-by-the-Sea U. D. C. (1916), 80 J. P. 195; 14 L. G. R. 322, an agreement was entered into in April, 1907, for the plaintiffs to supply the defendants in bulk for the whole of their district. Subsequently the defendants' district was enlarged by the addition of two parishes and the question arose on the construction of the agreement as to whether the defendants were entitled to a supply sufficient for their district as now being, or were restricted to a supply sufficient for their district as existent at the date of the agreement. It was held that the defendants were not entitled to a supply for the added areas. Note to Section 61.

An Act amalgamating a railway company and a dock company provided that none of the provisions of the Acts which would have related respectively to the dock company and the railway company exclusively, if the amalgamation had not taken place, were to apply to any portion of the undertaking of the other company. Before the amalgamation the dock company had obtained its water supply from the waterworks of a neighbouring corporation. The railway company had a supply of water from land acquired for railway purposes before the amalgamation. After the amalgamation it ceased to use the corporation's water and supplied the docks with water from its own land. The corporation sought to restrain the railway company from so doing. It was held, that since the amalgamation it was not ultra vires of the railway company to use its water for the supply of the dock (Att.-Gen. v. N. E. Rail. Co., [1906] 2 Ch. 675; 70 J. P. 473).

(b) It may be that this refers to any subsequent dispute, as for instance to the terms of the agreement. As to the provision for arbitration, see s. 179, post.

Where the terms arranged yield to the supplying authority a surplus over the cost to them of giving the supply, such surplus is assessable in their hands to income tax, including a part applied to a sinking fund (Harris v. Irvine Corporation (1900), 65 J. P. 663). See also Mullingar R. D. C. v. Rowles, [1913] 2 I. R. 44; Sugden v. Leeds Corporation and other cases, as to income tax collected in the notes to s. 211, post. Income tax on profit earned.

62. Where on the report of the surveyor (a) of a local (b) authority it appears to such authority that any house (c) within their district is without a proper supply of water (d), and that such a supply of water can be furnished thereto at a cost (e) not exceeding the water rate authorised by any local Act in force within the district, or where there is not any local Act so in force at a cost not exceeding twopence a week, or at such other cost as the Local Government Board may, on the application of the local authority (f), determine under all the circumstances of the case to be reasonable (g), the local authority shall give notice in writing to the owner (h), requiring him, within a time therein specified, to obtain such supply, and to do all such works as may be necessary for that purpose. Local authority may require houses to be supplied with water in certain cases.

If such notice is not complied with within the time specified, the local authority may, if they think fit, do such works (i), and obtain such supply, and for that purpose may enter into any contract with any water company supplying water within their district (k); and water rates (l) may be made and levied on the premises by the authority or company which furnishes the supply and may be recovered as if the owner or occupier of the premises had demanded a supply of water and were willing to pay water rates for the same; and any expenses incurred by the local authority in doing any such works may be recovered in a summary manner (m) from the owner of the premises, or may by order of the local authority be declared to be private improvement expenses (n).

(a) See the definition as to a surveyor of the rural authority in s. 4, ante, p. 7, and cf. note (d) to s. 16, ante, p. 56.

(b) This section applies both to urban and rural districts. It is not repealed by the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, post, although that Act gives increased powers to compel the provision of a supply to houses in rural districts (Colne Valley Section applies to rural districts.

Note to Section 62.

Waterworks Co. v. Treharne (1884), 48 J. P. 279; 50 L. T. 617; see also s. 8 of the L. G. A., 1894, post).

(c) It is a question of fact whether premises, e.g., a "lock-up" shop, are a "house" within the meaning of the section (Wootten v. Bishop (1907), 71 J. P. 334; 96 L. T. 705).

"Proper supply."

(d) These words in former Public Health Acts were read as signifying a supply of proper water, a well containing a supply of water, but polluted, not being a "proper supply" of water. This is probably a correct interpretation of the words, though, of course, they primarily apply to the case of a mere deficiency of water. See the provision as to lodging-houses in s. 81, post, p. 157.

Cost of supply.

(e) The cost referred to is the cost of the supply of water, and is quite distinct from the expense of bringing the supply to the premises. It is to be noted also that the section appears to apply only when a supply can be obtained from the mains of a company or of the authority. This construction results from the use of the words furnished thereto, which would be inapplicable to the case of a well, etc. provided at a distance from the house; and at the latter end of the section it is provided that water rates may be levied on the premises by the authority or company supplying the water. See the evidence of the Secretary to the L. G. B. before a Select Committee of the House of Commons in 1878, at pp. 11, 12 of the report. And see per STEPHEN, J., in Southend Waterworks Co. v. Howard, infra, note (l).

The limitation as to the cost of providing a water supply to a house contained in s. 3 of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, does not apply to s. 62, supra. Where, under s. 62, an owner is required by the authority to obtain a water supply from an unreasonable distance, it is competent to him to appeal to the M. of H. under s. 268, post, against a demand for payment (West Lancashire R. D. C. v. Ogilvy, [1899] 1 Q. B. 377; 63 J. P. 166).

(f) See s. 61, note (a), ante, p. 135, as to the mode of making this application.

Orders of the Local Government Board.

(g) This alternative was new in 1875. Although inconvenient, it appears to be necessary that the Board should make an order separately for every case, though probably several may be embraced in the same document. The Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, s. 8, post, however, provides that where application is made to the Board by an authority under s. 62 of this Act, to determine what is a reasonable cost within the meaning of that section, the Board may for that purpose fix, by order, a general scale of charges for the whole or any part of the district of the authority, and the cost of the supply of water to any house within the area specified in the order shall be deemed to be determined to be a reasonable cost within the meaning of that section if it does not exceed the cost authorised by such general scale of charges. When application is made to the M. of H. (successors of the L. G. B.) under s. 62 to determine the reasonable cost for the purposes of the section, and to fix a general scale of charges for the district, it should be borne in mind that the Ministry, under the section as amended by the Act of 1878, can only determine the reasonable cost at which a supply of water can be furnished compulsorily to houses which are without a proper supply. The Ministry state that, if there is no local Act in force authorising the levying of a water rate, and a supply is furnished by the district council pursuant to a requisition by a person entitled under s. 44 or s. 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, as incorporated by s. 57 of the present Act, the charges which the council may make for the supply are not controlled by the scale applicable to cases of enforced supply under s. 62, and they may under s. 56, charge in respect of the supply a water rate to be assessed on the net annual value of the premises supplied, or they may enter into an agreement with the consumer for the supply on terms which may include the payment of a water rent.

No scale of charges approved by the Ministry is required to enable a district council to compel the laying on of a supply to a house where the charge for the supply is not to exceed twopence a week. The Ministry have stated that it is competent to a district council at any time to reduce the charges in cases to which an order applies. It is contrary to their practice to approve a scale which contemplates the allowance of a discount for prompt payment.

(h) See definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. The notice must proceed from the authority, not from the surveyor or other officer. See St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Holmes and Bowyer v. Mather, ante, p. 84.

Note to Section 62.

(i) In order to strengthen their power of entry upon premises for the purposes of this section urban authorities sometimes apply to the M. of H. for the powers of a rural district council under s. 7 of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878. See post.

Power of entry.

(k) This was new in 1875. See s. 174, post, as to the making of contracts.

Making and levying of rates.

(l) As to how water rates may be made and levied, see 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, ss. 68—74, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 93, s. 21, incorporated herewith by s. 57, ante, p. 131, and set out in App. I., post, Vol. II.

An authority caused a water main to be laid along a street, and gave notice to the owner of a house in such street, under this section, to obtain a proper supply, and do all such works as might be necessary for that purpose. The notice was not complied with, and the authority did not exercise the power given to them by the section of executing the works necessary to connect the house with the main. In an action by the water company for water rates, it was held that the defendant was liable, and that it was not a condition precedent to such liability that the works necessary to bring the water into the house should have been executed (Southend Waterworks Co. v. Howard (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 215; 48 J. P. 469).

(m) See s. 251, post. For a definition of owner, see s. 4, ante, p. 8. It will be seen that though the occupier may be required to pay for the supply of the water, the owner is to pay the cost of the works. As to the cases in which an owner may be compelled to pay the water rates, see 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 72, in App. I., post, Vol. II. No preliminary determination of the authority as to the necessity for the works need be proved in any proceeding to recover the expenses (Caballero v. Lewis (1874), 38 J. P. 614).

(n) See, as to these expenses, s. 213, post, and as to appeals to the M. of H. see s. 268, post.

Powers of water company for supplying water to local authority.

63. Any water company may contract to supply water or may lease their waterworks to any local authority; and the directors of any water company, in pursuance, in the case of a company registered under the Companies Act, 1862 (a), of a special resolution of the members passed in manner provided by that Act (b), and in the case of any other company of a resolution passed by three-fourths (c) in number and value of the members present, either personally or by proxy, at a meeting specially convened with notice of the business to be transacted, may sell and transfer to any local authority, on such terms as may be agreed on between the company and the local authority, all the rights powers and privileges, and all or any of the waterworks premises and other property of the company, but subject to all liabilities to which the same are subject at the time of such purchase.

(a) Now the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. A similar provision with regard to gas and market companies will be found in ss. 162 and 168, post. For the power of a council to purchase waterworks, and for decisions upon the construction of "purchase clauses" in deeds and statutes, see s. 51, ante, p. 119, and the notes thereto.

(b) See 8 Edw. 7, c. 69, ss. 69, 70.

(c) The L. G. A., 1858, s. 63, required a resolution of three-fifths. The directors may contract or lease of themselves; but can only sell with consent of the shareholders.

Vesting of public cisterns, etc. in local authority.

64. All existing public cisterns pumps wells (a) reservoirs (b) conduits aqueducts and works used for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants of the district of any local authority shall (c) vest in and be under the control of such authority, and such authority may (d)

Section 64. cause the same to be maintained and plentifully supplied (e) with pure and wholesome water (f), or may substitute (g) maintain and plentifully supply with pure and wholesome water (f) other such works equally convenient; they may also (subject to the provisions of this Act) (h) construct any other such works for supplying water for the gratuitous use of any inhabitants who choose to carry the same away, not for sale, but for their own private use (i).

"Public" wells.

(a) A well on private ground, the water of which had been used for domestic purposes gratuitously by the inhabitants in the vicinity for the prescriptive period, was held to be a public well within the meaning of the corresponding provisions of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1867, s. 89 (4), and it was also held that the local authority might enter upon the land and do all acts to the well for continuing and maintaining it, which the inhabitants might have done before, even though there might be a company with a vested right to supply the inhabitants with water (Smith v. Archibald (1880), 5 App. Cas. 489). The facts in that case were as follows: Situated in one corner of a field in the parish of D. was a well. From the well to the entrance of the field there was a footpath, and from that entrance to the public road going through the village of D. there was a cart road. The inhabitants of D. had for the prescriptive period used the water of the well for domestic purposes, and had, among other acts done to the well, cradled it with stones at their own expense. The local authority, acting under the section already mentioned, caused the well to be covered in with an iron plate, and placed therein a hand pump with the avowed object of keeping the well free from pollution. The proprietor of the field, alleging the well to be his private property, instituted proceedings to compel the authority to remove the cover and pump. It was held by the House of Lords that the well was a public well within the meaning of the statute, and that the authority, as representing the inhabitants, had not done anything in excess of their powers. This decision was followed and applied in very similar circumstances in Dungarvan Guardians v. Mansfield, [1897] 1 I. R. 420. In Holmfirth L. B. v. Shore (1895), 59 J. P. 344, a stone trough receiving water from a spring at some distance from it, was held to be either a "well" or a "reservoir." WRIGHT, J., pointed out that the Scotch Act does not vest the wells, etc. in the local authority, so that the powers of an authority are wider under the English Act. See also Att.-Gen. v. Tonkin (1901), 18 T. L. R. 29. As to customary and prescriptive rights to draw water from a spring, see Harrop v. Hirst (1869), L. R. 4 Ex. 43; 33 J. P. 103, and Dungarvan Guardians v. Mansfield, supra.

"Reservoir."

(b) In Leadgate L. B. v. Bland (1881), 45 J. P. 526, KAY, J., held that a natural pond was a "reservoir" within the section, having been used by the public for a number of years for the purpose of watering horses.

"Vesting."

(c) By the previous Public Health Acts, such cisterns, etc., had been vested in the respective local authorities, so that this section only continues the vesting already established. As to the meaning of the phrase vest in, see s. 13, note (h), ante, p. 47, and the notes to s. 149, post, p. 273. The effect of it is to enable the authority to bring an action in their own name (and not in the name only of the Attorney-General) for damages for any interference with the well itself, although such interference is not proved to be injurious to the public rights. But an action for damages for interfering with public access, or for an injunction to restrain interference with access, must be brought in the name of the Attorney-General (Holmfirth L. B. v. Shore, supra).

A parish council has no power to bring an action on behalf of the inhabitants of the parish, even for the purpose of restraining interference with their access to a pump properly erected by the council, under the powers given by s. 8 (1) of the L. G. A., 1894 (Stoke Parish Council v. Price, [1899] 2 Ch. 277; 63 J. P. 502).

Where an abandoned shaft of a disused mine within the meaning of the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, has become a public well, and as such vested in a local authority under this section, the authority are not the "owners" of the shaft within the meaning of s. 41 of the first-named Act, so as to render them liable under s. 13 to fence it (Knuckey v. Redruth R. D. C., [1904] 1 K. B. 382; 68 J. P. 172).

Note to Section 64.

(d) Quære, how far the word casts a duty on the authority. They may maintain public wells, etc., although there is a company which supplies the district with water. "What the Act says is, notwithstanding that there might be a company with a vested right to supply the inhabitants, the local authority may, where there is a public well, and where there is a public right to be gratuitously supplied (from it), continue and maintain that well" (per Lord BLACKBURN, in Smith v. Archibald, supra, upon the somewhat similar Scotch Act).

Duty and powers of authority.

(e) In Edwards v. Joliffe, W. N. (1877) 120, an injunction was granted at the suit of the plaintiff, through whose estate a lane passed, to restrain the defendant, a servant of the surveyor of highways, from digging holes in the roadway of the lane under these circumstances. On a piece of land not actually part of the lane, but entirely open to it, were five public wells which suddenly failed. The highway board, with the sanction of the rural sanitary authority, in whom the wells were vested under this section, ordered the defendant to dig the holes either to recover the water or to discover the cause of its having ceased to flow. The plaintiff's land on either side of the lane was on a slope, and on the southern side, where the land was below the level of the wells, the plaintiff had been drifting for water, and the defendant said he had no doubt the supply of water to the wells had been tapped by the plaintiff's operations:—Held, that the section did not authorise the authority to enter another man's land and help themselves to water. There was no suggestion that the plaintiff had done anything more than he was entitled to do, or that the defendant was not entering his land.

(f) If the well, etc., does not contain pure and wholesome water, and the local authority does not care to maintain it, they may close it under s. 70, post, p. 148.

(g) This would appear to refer to a substitution of the new works in the same place as the old. If so, this right would appear to be independent of the restriction imposed upon the local authority by s. 52, ante, p. 125, as to the construction of waterworks.

Notice to water company.

(h) This appears to refer to s. 52. If there is a water company supplying the district, the local authority would seem to require their consent to the gratuitous provision of water to the inhabitants.

"Gratuitous" supply.

(i) A local Act empowered the local board to supply the town with water at certain rates for domestic purposes, and for other than domestic purposes for such remuneration and upon such terms and conditions as should be agreed upon between them and the persons desirous of having such supply. An inhabitant having presented to the town an ornamental fountain with a trough or basin, which was set up in one of the public streets, the board supplied it with water on market days for the use of cattle in the market, and for horses, if yoked, when passing to and fro. The respondent, who kept horses, with a view to evade payment of the rate for the supply of water to his stable, took his horses to the fountain to drink. Upon an information against him under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 59, post, the magistrates being of opinion that the board had no right to erect a fountain on the public highway otherwise than for the gratuitous use of the public under the corresponding section of the P. H. A., 1848, declined to convict. On appeal, it was held that they were wrong, for notwithstanding the fountain might be a public nuisance, yet the water was the private property of the board, and the respondent had no right to take it against their will (Hildreth v. Adamson (1860), 8 C. B. (N.S.) 587; 25 J. P. 645). The effect of this case is that an authority may, if they think fit, limit the purposes for which the gratuitous supply is provided. The court refrained from expressing any opinion as to whether a fountain for gratuitous supply might by virtue of this section be erected on a public highway. And it may be observed that while the P. H. A., 1890, s. 42, enables an urban authority to authorise the erection of a statue or monument in a street, it does not mention a fountain.

The corporation of H., in exercise of their powers as a local authority, erected a drinking trough in the main street, in front of the plaintiffs' premises:—Held, that, although some annoyance was caused to the plaintiffs by the placing of the trough in front of their premises, there was no sufficient evidence of the existence of a legal nuisance to justify the interference of the court (Baker v. Hertford (Corporation of) (1900) Ch. D. (BUCKLEY, J.), May 17th, 1900).

Note to Section 64.

In McLoughlin v. Warrington Corporation (1911), 75 J. P. 57, a plaintiff recovered damages against a local authority in respect of injuries caused by a stone falling upon him from a drinking fountain belonging to the defendants and erected in a highway. The stone was dislodged by a person climbing the fountain to view a procession, but the fountain was alleged to be in a defective condition.

As to the erection of stand-pipes by a rural authority or by an urban authority under an order of the M. of H., and as to the rating of persons using water from such stand-pipes, see the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, ss. 9—11, post.

A local authority, in whom a public well is vested by this section, has no power to grant a licence to abstract water from the well for the purpose of bottling and selling, so as to sensibly diminish the supply of water to riparian proprietors along a stream fed by the well (Mostyn v. Atherton, [1899] 2 Ch. 360).

Water for public baths, or trading or manufacturing purposes.

65. Any local authority may, if they think fit, supply water from any waterworks purchased or constructed by them to any public baths or wash-houses (a), or for trading or manufacturing purposes, on such terms and conditions as may be agreed on between the local authority and the persons desirous of being so supplied (b); moreover, any local authority may, if they think fit, construct any works for the gratuitous supply of any public baths or wash-houses established otherwise than for private profit or supported out of any poor or borough rates (c).

(a) See the Baths and Wash-houses Acts, as defined by s. 4, ante, p. 35.

(b) It is optional with the local authority whether they will supply water for these purposes or not. They are obliged to supply water for domestic purposes if they undertake the supply of water to the district. See s. 55, ante, p. 128, and see the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 53, in App. I., post, Vol. II.

The agreement should be in writing, and under the seal of the parties.

(c) It is not quite clear what is referred to by these latter words, as public baths and wash-houses are supported out of public funds.

Duty of urban authority to provide fire-plugs.

66. Every urban authority (a) shall (b) cause fire-plugs and all necessary works machinery and assistance for securing an efficient supply of water in case of fire to be provided and maintained, and for this purpose they may enter into any agreement with any water company or person; and they shall (c) paint or mark on the buildings and walls within the streets words or marks near to such fire-plugs to denote the situation thereof, and do such other things for the purposes aforesaid as they may deem expedient.

Position of rural authorities.

(a) It will be observed that only urban authorities are placed under this obligation; and as there is no other distinct enabling section, rural district councils are given no express powers under the Act for the provision of fire-plugs, hydrants and other appliances for furnishing water for fire brigade purposes. Where, however, a rural council provide a public water supply for a parish in their district they may be presumed to have power to fix fire hydrants in the mains as part of the works of water supply which they may carry out under s. 51. In other cases, if power to provide hydrants is required, they should apply to the M. of H. for an order under s. 276. In view of the imperative character of s. 66, it is the Ministry's practice to restrict such orders to the particular parish or parishes in which the appliances are shown to be required, and in which the council are prepared to take action. In the opinion of the department a parish council has no power to provide hydrants.

Duty of authority.

(b) Note that these words are imperative, and require the urban authority to make this provision. See Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Brentford L. B., infra, per LINDLEY, L.J., [1894] 2 Q. B. 735, at p. 738. The clause is introduced from the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, s. 124. Nothing, however, in the present section or in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, ss. 38—41, imposes on an urban authority any obligation to bear the expense of maintaining in repair the fire-plugs in their district, unless such fire-plugs have been fixed by them or by some water company or other person at their request (Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Brentford L. B., [1894] 2 Q. B. 735; 59 J. P. 51).

Note to Section 66.

A private water Act provided that the company should, at the request of an owner or occupier of any premises situate in or adjoining any street in which any main or service pipe of the company was or should be laid, and who required a supply of water, afford a supply of water. The plaintiff declared upon the section so providing, and stated that he was such an owner and occupier, and that he requested and required a supply of water, but that the company made default in affording to him the said supply, by reason whereof he was unable to extinguish a fire which destroyed his premises. The defendants pleaded that the main or service pipe had a certain fire-plug properly fixed in it, and that the said fire-plug was opened for the purpose of extinguishing another fire, which was the cause of the default. They also pleaded that they were prevented from affording the said supply of water from unavoidable cause or accident:—Held, on demurrer, that the former plea was good, but the latter bad (Campbell v. East London Waterworks Co. (1872), 36 J. P. 711; 26 L. T. 475).

Provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847.

By the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the undertakers are: (1) to fix and maintain fire-plugs; (2) to furnish to the town commissioners a sufficient supply of water for certain public purposes; (3) to keep their pipes to which the fire-plugs are fixed at all times charged with water at a certain pressure, and to allow all persons at all times to use the same for extinguishing fire without compensation; and (4) to supply to every owner or occupier of any dwelling-house, having paid or tendered the water rate, sufficient water for domestic purposes. Penalties are imposed by the Act for neglect of each of the above duties. The plaintiff brought an action for damages against a waterworks company for not keeping their pipes charged as required by the Act, whereby his premises were burnt down:—Held, reversing the Court of Exchequer, that the statute gave no right of action to the plaintiff (Atkinson v. Newcastle and Gateshead Waterworks Co. (1877), 2 Ex. D. 441; 42 J. P. 183). But the decision in this case was held not to apply in an action for injuries sustained by the bursting of a fire-plug in a highway, the penalty being for failing to keep the pipes charged in case of fire (Hancock v. Southwark and Vauxhall Waterworks Co., W. N. (1889) 198). On the other hand it was held to apply to an action for failing to supply water to an occupier (McColla v. Clacton-on-Sea Gas and Water Co. (1889), 5 T. L. R. 690). An urban authority requested a water company which supplied their district, and whose provisional order incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, to fix a fire-plug at a spot in a street where it was essential that a fire-plug should be placed, but where the existing pipe of the company was of insufficient capacity to carry a proper fire-plug. The company were willing to place a proper fire-plug at the point, provided the authority would pay the expense of laying a new length of three-inch main instead of the existing one-inch pipe. An information having been laid against the company, charging them with neglecting to fix the fire-plug, the company were convicted and fined. But it was held on a case stated that the duties of the company as to the supply of water were regulated by s. 35 of the Act of 1847, which provides for a constant supply for domestic use, and that s. 38 imposed no duty on the company to provide pipes of such capacity that fire-plugs could be affixed to them suitable for the supply of water for extinguishing fires and that the conviction must therefore be quashed (Wells Water Co. v. Wells Town Council (1886), 51 J. P. 135; 55 L. T. 188). The water which may be taken by all persons at all times for extinguishing fire without compensation, under s. 42 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, is the water from undertakers' pipes to which fire-plugs are fixed (Weardale and Consett Waterworks Co. v. Chester-le-Street Co-operative Society, Ltd., [1904] 2 K. B. 240; 68 J. P. 386). See also judgments of his Honour Judge BRADBURY, noticed in 70 J. P. N. 472, and of his Honour Judge WOODFALL, in Journal of Gas Lighting, 1907, p. 988.

A water company which has provided hydrants pursuant to the Metropolitan Fire Brigade Act, 1865, s. 32, and the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, s. 34, or either of these sections, may, in the absence of any agreement under the London County

Note to Section 66.

Council (General Powers) Act, 1894, s. 4, and without the consent of the County Council, lawfully use such hydrants for purposes other than the supply of water for extinguishing fires and the purposes specified in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 37, and such user may, with the permission of the company, be exercised by other persons also (London C. C. v. East London Waterworks Co., [1900] 1 Q. B. 330).

Liability for accidents due to fire-plugs.

A water company, having observed all statutory directions in laying down their pipes, are not responsible for an escape of water from them not caused by their own negligence. The fact that their precautions prove insufficient in a winter of extreme coldness, such as could not have been foreseen, is not sufficient to render them liable for negligence. Fire-plugs properly constructed having been inserted in these pipes in pursuance of the Act, semble, per BRAMWELL, B., that the company are not liable for an accident caused by the accumulation of ice in a street over a plug (Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. (1856), 11 Ex. 781 ; 20 J. P. 247).

Although a water company is not liable for the unforeseen results of an extraordinary frost, yet they are bound to take reasonable care to provide against the consequences of ordinary frost. Where it appeared that it was known that the effect of frost would be to cause plugs in the water pipes to start, and thus to let the water out at the side, and that some precautions might have been taken, if not to prevent this, at all events to prevent the water from escaping through the soil, and, no such precautions having been taken, the plugs started in a frost of extraordinary severity, and the water thus escaping, ran through the soil into the plaintiff's cellar :—Held, that there was some evidence of negligence on which a jury might hold the company liable (Steggles v. New River Co. (1863), 11 W. R. 234 ; affirmed, 13 W. R. 413).

By a local Act a waterworks company was bound at the request of the Town Improvement Commissioners to fix fire-plugs in their mains, and to repair and keep them in order at the cost of the commissioners, in whom the property in the plugs was vested by their Improvement Act. In consequence of the cap of one of the plugs provided under the Act being broken, a horse placed his foot in the plug-hole and was lamed :—Held, that the waterworks company and not the commissioners were liable for the injury (Bayley v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co. (1860), 25 J. P. 199 ; 6 H. & N. 241).

It will be found stated in the notes to s. 144, post, p. 254, that though a local authority are not liable for accidents caused by the mere non-repair of highways, they may be responsible not as surveyors of highways, but in another capacity as the owners of drains, water-pipes, fire-plugs, etc., in the highway. Thus, in Blackmore v. Mile End Old Town (Vestry of) (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 451 ; 47 J. P. 52, an authority were held liable for an accident caused by an iron flap placed in the highway over a water meter, the flap having worn smooth and become slippery and dangerous. But where the same body are both the highway authority and the water or sewer authority they cannot be held responsible for accidents caused by the wearing away of the road allowing the edge of a manhole cover or a sewer grating or a water valve cover to project dangerously above the surface of the road, the cover or grating not being in itself out of repair or improperly constructed (Thompson v. Mayor, etc. of Brighton ; Oliver v. Horsham L. B., [1894] 1 Q. B. 332 ; 58 J. P. 297 ; overruling Kent v. Worthing L. B. (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 118 ; 47 J. P. 23. See also Winslow v. Bushey U. D. C. (1908), 72 J. P. 259). It had previously been held that a water company authorised by statute (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 38) to place fire-plugs in a highway, and required to keep the plugs in repair, but having no power to repair the highway, is not bound to vary the level of such plugs from time to time if and as the surface of the road wears away. If the fire-plug is properly placed in the first instance, and is kept in repair, the company will not be liable for a personal injury to one of the public by reason of the projection of the plug above the level of the highway (Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 462 ; 50 J. P. 756). Compare, however, with these cases Papworth v. Battersea Borough Council, [1914] 2 K. B. 89, reversed on appeal, [1915] 1 K. B. 392.

The plaintiff, leaning on his stick, as he walked down a street, put it into a hole, in which was a stop-cock, fell, and broke his leg. A new trial was asked for on the ground that there was no evidence that the defendant company were responsible for having put or kept the unsafe box in which the stop-cock was fixed. The defect in the fitting of the stop-cock was that it was contained in an old-fashioned "box," with a deep open hole to admit the key for turning the water off and on, instead of a closed box of the pattern now used. There was evidence that an officer of the company had been seen superintending the putting down the stop-cock. The box was impressed with the name of the company. It had been supplied by them, and they had a regulation made under statutory authority, requiring such work to be done for occupiers and owners by themselves:—Held, that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendants for which they were liable (Strube v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. (1888), 5 T. L. R. 638; affirming 53 J. P. 424; 5 T. L. R. 451. See also Stockings v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (1891), 7 T. L. R. 460; Osborn v. Metropolitan Water Board (1910), 74 J. P. 190; 102 L. T. 217; Rosenbaum v. Metropolitan Water Board (1910), 75 J. P. 12; 103 L. T. 739; and cf. Chapman v. Fylde Waterworks Co., in the notes to s. 28 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, in App. I., post, Vol. II., and Colne Valley Water Co. v. Hall (1907), 72 J. P. 25; 98 L. T. 398).

In Simpson v. Metropolitan Water Board (1917), 15 L. G. R. 629, it was held that where the proximate cause of the raising of an iron plate, lid or covering of a water apparatus in a street of the Metropolis above the level of the pavement so as to be a dangerous obstruction by sticking up is the malicious act of a third person against which precautions would have been inoperative the board is not liable to any one thrown down by it and hurt in the absence of a finding that the occurrence could or ought to have been foreseen and provided against.

With reference to the foregoing decisions it must be noticed that within the area supplied by the Metropolitan Water Board communication pipes from a main to houses, and stop-cock boxes connected therewith, are now by virtue of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, ss. 8, 19, repairable (whenever laid or constructed) by the owners or occupiers of the houses. Therefore, an owner or occupier, and not the Board, is liable to a passenger for injuries due to a defective box (Batt v. Metropolitan Water Board, [1911] 2 K. B. 965; 75 J. P. 545; and see also Mist v. Metropolitan Water Board (1915), 79 J. P. 495).

See Plantza v. Glasgow Corporation, [1910] S. C. 786, for a case of injury due to collision with a turnkey standing in a stop-cock.

During the recent war there were a number of cases of accidents arising from obstructions, etc. in highways, and in which negligence was alleged. Each of these cases arose out of the public lighting restrictions imposed during the war. See Gt. Central Co. v. Hewlett, [1916] 2 A. C. 511; 80 J. P. 361; Morrison v. Lord Mayor, etc. of Sheffield, [1917] 2 K. B. 866; 81 J. P. 277; Baldock v. Westminster City Council (1919), 83 J. P. 98; 17 L. G. R. 190; Carpenter v. Finsbury Borough Council (1920), 84 J. P. 107.

Fire-engines and brigades.

As to the powers of an urban authority to provide fire-engines, see s. 171 (2), the Parish Fire-engines Act, 1898, and the P. H. A., 1907, s. 90.

Rural authorities may obtain powers in this behalf by means of an urban powers order under s. 276, and independently of such powers, action may be taken parochially in rural parishes, by the parish council, lighting inspectors, or overseers, as the case may be, under one or other of the following enactments: the Lighting and Watching Act, 1833 (s. 44), the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1867 (s. 29), the L. G. A., 1894 (s. 6 (1) (c) (ii)), the Parish Fire-engines Act, 1898, and the P. H. A., 1907 (s. 90).

Failure to indicate position of plug.

(c) The defendant authority had placed a fire-plug in a road not repairable by them, and had put up a plate of the usual kind, "F. P. 22 ft."; the plate was some feet out of position with regard to the plug; but, although it did not indicate the correct line to the plug, a searcher following the line indicated would ordinarily have seen the plug. At the material time the plug was buried by a layer of earth or ashes, but this had not been done by or with the knowledge of the defendants. A fire broke out on the plaintiffs' premises, and, as the jury found, increased damage was done because the fire-brigade could not for some time find the plug in question. The jury found that the defendants were guilty of negligence in erecting a misleading plate:—Held, that the defendants were liable in damages as for an act of misfeasance (Dawson v. Bingley U. D. C., [1911] 2 K. B. 149; 75 J. P. 289).

Note to Section 66. This section will be a sufficient justification, though the owner or occupier of the buildings or walls should object to the mark.

Agreements with universities.

67. In the Oxford or Cambridge district (a) the local authority may supply water to any hall college or premises of the university within such district, on such terms with respect to the mode of paying for such supply as may from time to time be agreed on between such university, or any hall or college thereof, and the local authority.

(a) This section renders the demand of water rates from the occupiers of individual chambers unnecessary, but the agreement must be duly executed under seal by the local authority and the corporate body of the university, college or hall. See s. 342, post, as to Oxford.

Provisions for Protection of Water.

Penalty for causing water to be corrupted by gas washings

68. Any person (a) engaged in the manufacture of gas who (b) :

(1) Causes or suffers to be brought or to flow into any stream reservoir aqueduct pond or place for water, or into any drain or pipe communicating therewith, any washing or other substance produced in making or supplying gas ; or shall forfeit for every such offence the sum of two hundred pounds, and, after the expiration of twenty-four hours notice (c) from the local authority or the person to whom the water belongs in that behalf, a further sum of twenty pounds for every day during which the offence is continued (d) or during the continuance of the act whereby the water is fouled.

(2) Wilfully does any act connected with the making or supplying of gas whereby the water in any such stream reservoir aqueduct pond or place for water is fouled,

Every such penalty may be recovered, with full costs of suit, in any of the superior courts, in the case of water belonging to or under the control of the local authority by the local authority, and in any other case by the person into whose water such washing or other substance is conveyed or flows or whose water is fouled by any such act as aforesaid, or in default of proceedings by such person, after notice to him from the local authority of their intention to proceed for such penalty, by the local authority (e) ; but such penalty shall not be recoverable unless it be sued for during the continuance of the offence, or within six months after it has ceased (f).

(a) This word, according to the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 6, includes any body of persons corporate or unincorporate.

Duty of gas manufacturer an absolute duty.

(b) A private Act incorporating a gas company, and empowering them to make the necessary works, provided (s. 160), that if the company should at any time "cause or suffer to be conveyed or to flow" into any stream, etc., or place for water within the limits of the Act, any washing produced in making gas, or do any act to the water contained in any such stream, etc., or place for water, whereby the water therein should be fouled or corrupted, the company should forfeit for every such offence £200. Section 161 imposed an additional penalty of £20 per day for the continuance of such pollution more than twenty-four hours after notice. Section 165 made the company liable to a penalty if any water was polluted by the escape of gas. The site for the gas tank was selected by an experienced engineer, and the company built it in a proper manner, and with all ordinary care and prudence.

Note to Section 68.

They knew that mines had been worked in the neighbourhood, but did not know that any mines had been worked under their own lands. After some years the gas tank cracked, and the washings produced in the making of gas escaped and percolating underground polluted the water in the plaintiff's well. The company then found on inquiry that mines had been worked by strangers under part of their land close up to the tank. The crack in the tank was caused by subsidence of the soil, owing, in all probability, to the mining operations:—Held, by the Exchequer Chamber, that the company were liable under s. 160 to the penalty of £200 for polluting the plaintiff's water by the gas washings (Hipkins v. Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas Co. (1861), 24 J. P. 438; 6 H. & N. 250).

When noxious matter percolated through the soil from gasworks so as to foul a well, such percolation was held to render a company liable under the similar provisions of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90. A well which, on account of its having become contaminated, had been disused by the owners for several years, and had been covered over, was held to be still a well within the meaning of the Act. Non-user, and the closing of his own well in consequence of its being polluted, even coupled with acceptance by the plaintiff of the use of wells substituted by the defendants, was held not to be such an abandonment of the former as to alter its character and make it no longer a well, nor could any licence to pollute it be inferred from such a state of facts. Quære, per KEATING, J., whether a man could by deed give an irrevocable licence to pollute a well. A prescription to foul a well will be defeated by variation and excess in the degree of fouling during the prescribed period (Millington v. Griffiths and Others (1874), 30 L. T. 65). In the above case it is assumed that a well is a "place for water."

As to the meaning of the word "causes," see Moses v. Midland Rail. Co. (1915), 79 J. P. 367; 113 L. T. 451, which was a decision under s. 5 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861.

Apart from statutory provision it appears that pollution of a river by gas washings is a nuisance at common law for which an indictment will lie. See R. v. Medley and Others (1834), 6 C. & P. 292, and Herring v. Lincoln Corporation (1920), 42 M. C. C. 41.

Similar statutory provisions.

It is to be observed that the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 21, contains provisions similar to this section. Where, therefore, that Act is incorporated with a local Act, or where a local Act containing similar provisions is in force, proceedings may be taken either under this or the local Act by virtue of s. 340, post.

The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 62, which is incorporated in this Act by s. 57, ante, p. 131, and is printed in App. I., post, Vol. II., contains provisions almost identical with this section, which is taken from 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, ss. 23, 24, and extends the provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 80.

The W. Gas Company unexpectedly discharged a quantity of offensive liquid from their works into the sewers of the W. Corporation. The liquid passed through the sewage works on to the sewage farm and thence into a tributary of the Thames. The W. Corporation were convicted of unlawfully and wilfully suffering a large quantity of washing or other substance produced in the making of gas to flow or pass into a tributary of the Thames contrary to s. 92 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894. On an appeal it was held that it was not proved the appellants had "wilfully" suffered the deleterious matter to pass into the Thames, and the conviction was quashed (High Wycombe Corporation v. Thames Conservators (1898), 78 L. T. 463; 14 T. L. R. 358). Proceedings had already been taken by the conservators under the same Act against the W. Gas Company in respect of this occurrence. The company pleaded guilty and were fined.

(c) As to notices and their service, see ss. 266, 267, post.

Daily penalties

(d) Apparently this means after notice has been given to the offender, so that if no notice be given a penalty of £200 is recoverable; if notice be given, that sum and the additional sum from the time of the notice is recoverable.

(e) The same provisions in the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, ss. 23—25, were held to supersede a clause in a local Act containing similar penalties (Parry v. Croydon Gas and Coke Co. (1864), 28 J. P. 86; 15 C. B. (N.S.) 568; but see s. 340, post. See also note (b), supra.

Note to Section 68.

(f) 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 80, contained provisions for examining the gas pipes which are omitted here, and it is very doubtful whether s. 305, post, will apply to this case.

Local authority may take proceedings to prevent pollution of streams.

69. Any local authority, with the sanction of the Attorney-General, may, either in their own name or in the name of any other person, with the consent of such person, take such proceedings by indictment bill in Chancery action or otherwise as they may deem advisable for the purpose of protecting any watercourse (a) within their jurisdiction from pollutions arising from sewage (b) either within or without their district; and the costs of and incidental to any such proceedings, including any costs that may be awarded to the defendant, shall be deemed to be expenses properly incurred by such authority in the execution of this Act.

(a) Note that this is not applicable to all rivers and streams, but only to such streams as constitute "watercourses"; and it is presumed that they are not such as belong to the authority, seeing that the ordinary laws regarding property would enable an authority to take such proceedings in reference to their own property. To constitute a "watercourse" there must be water flowing in a channel between banks more or less defined (per TENTERDEN, L.C.J., in R. v. Inhabitants of Oxfordshire (1830), 1 B. & Ad. p. 301). It may be natural or artificial. See Bowes v. Watson (1879), 44 J. P. 364; 42 L. T. 27; Smith v. Barnham (1876), 1 Ex. D. 419; 40 J. P. 710; Biscoe v. Drought (1859), 11 Ir. C. L. R. 250; Sutcliffe v. Booth (1863), 32 L. J. Q. B. 136; 27 J. P. 613; Remfry v. Surveyor-General of Natal, [1896] A. C. 558. The line of a periodical "bourne flow" was held not to be a watercourse in Pearce v. Croydon R. D. C., cited in note to s. 17 on p. 60, ante. See, also, as to a similar "flow," Att.-Gen. v. Lewes Corporation, cited on p. 27, ante. As to when a stream or watercourse may become a "sewer" see the last-mentioned case and other decisions in notes to s. 4, p. 26, ante.

(b) Pollution from manufacturing or other similar processes is not provided for by this section. See, however, the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts, 1876 and 1893, in App. I., post, Vol. II., as to pollution by solid matters, sewage and manufacturing and mining pollutions, and the duties cast upon local authorities by those Acts.

As to the power of a county council to take proceedings to restrain the pollution of a stream, see the L. G. A., 1888, s. 14, post.

Power to close polluted wells, etc.

70. On the representation of any person to any local authority that within their district the water in any well tank or cistern, public or private, or supplied from any public pump, and used or likely to be used by man for drinking or domestic purposes, or for manufacturing drinks for the use of man (a), is so polluted (b) as to be injurious to health, such authority may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction (c) for an order to remedy the same; and thereupon such court shall summon the owner or occupier (d) of the premises to which the well tank or cistern belongs, if it be private, and in the case of a public well tank cistern or pump, any person alleged in the application to be interested in the same (e), and may either dismiss the application, or may make an order directing the well tank cistern or pump to be permanently or temporarily closed, or the water to be used for certain purposes only, or such other order as may appear to them to be requisite to prevent injury to the health of persons drinking the water (f).

The court may, if they see fit, cause the water complained of to be analysed at the cost of the local authority applying to them under this section (g). Section 70.

If the person on whom an order under this section is made fails to comply with the same, the court may on the application of the local authority authorise them to do whatever may be necessary in the execution of the order, and any expenses incurred by them may be recovered in a summary manner (h) from the person on whom the order is made.

Expenses incurred by any rural authority in the execution of this section, and not recovered by them as aforesaid, shall be special expenses (i).

(a) These last words were new, and were inserted to include cases when the water is used for the manufacture of aerated or other drinks for human consumption. Water for manufactured drinks.

(b) The well or tank must be alleged to be polluted, not merely likely to be polluted even if this is practically certain. The section would therefore not meet the case of the opening of a burial ground in close proximity to a well. In such circumstances, if the well cannot be closed, it must be closely watched.

(c) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

(d) Apparently the court may select which party should be summoned, but the authority should lay their views before the court. As to the word owner, see the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. Persons to be summoned.

(e) These words are general and indefinite. Presumably the proper person will be a parish officer or some officer of the authority, as for the most part the well or other place will be vested in the authority under s. 64, ante, p. 139. It has sometimes been considered that persons were interested in a well because they were in the habit of taking water from it. But it is submitted that the interest here referred to is one of ownership. At all events, an order could not be made on such persons under this section.

(f) Very wide powers are granted to the court by these words. It may be prudent to allow any person to be affected (though not named in the application) to show cause against the granting of the order. See Gill v. Bright (1871), 41 L. J. M. C. 22 ; 36 J. P. 198 ; R. v. Cheshire Lines Committee (1873), L. R. 8 Q. B. 344 ; 37 J. P. 373, and cases cited in note (e) to s. 158, post, p. 356.

(g) 38 & 39 Vict. c. 63, and the amending Acts in App. I., post, which provide for the analysis of food and drugs, exclude the analysis of water. Hence any analysis of water must be made independently of those Acts. It is to be noticed also that the power of the court to order an analysis is limited to cases in which the local authority are the applicants for the order. Analysis of water.

In sending samples of water to an analyst it is customary for the local authority to furnish information as to the source so as to assist the analyst in forming an opinion. If, however, the authority require the results of an analysis only, leaving the question of the quality of the water and its suitability for consumption to be determined by their M. O. H. they are at liberty to ask for an analysis only.

REGULATION OF CELLAR DWELLINGS AND LODGING-HOUSES.

Occupation of Cellar Dwellings (a).

71. It shall not be lawful to let (b) or occupy (c) or suffer to be occupied separately as a dwelling any cellar (including for the purposes of this Act in that expression any vault or underground room) built or Prohibition of occupying cellar dwellings.

Section 71. rebuilt after the passing of this Act, or which is not lawfully so let or occupied at the time of the passing of this Act (d).

(a) The Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 17 (7), post, Vol. II., prohibits in many cases the habitual use as a sleeping place of a room, the surface of the floor of which is more than three feet below street level.

(b) The infringement of this section is an offence: for the penalty, see s. 73, post, p. 151. In Gowen v. Sedgwick (1904), 68 J. P. 484, it was held that an owner of a new house, who had allowed it to be occupied by a caretaker rent free, could not be convicted of having "let" the house in contravention of a byelaw.

(c) As to what amounts to occupation "as a dwelling," see s. 74, post, p. 151.

(d) But for these words the repeal of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 67, would operate so as to legalise the letting or occupation of cellars built since the passing of that Act. The effect is that no cellar built or rebuilt since 1848 can be lawfully occupied, unless it was let or occupied before that year, and not even in such a case unless the requirements of the next section are complied with.

Existing cellar dwellings only to be let or occupied on certain conditions.

72. It shall not be lawful (a) to let or occupy (b) or suffer to be occupied separately as a dwelling, any cellar whatsoever (c), unless the following requisitions are complied with; (that is to say,)

Unless the cellar is in every part thereof at least seven feet in height, measured from the floor to the ceiling thereof, and is at least three feet of its height above the surface of the street or ground adjoining or nearest to the same; and

Unless there is outside of and adjoining the cellar and extending along the entire frontage thereof, and upwards from six inches below the level of the floor thereof up to the surface of the said street or ground, an open area of at least two feet and six inches wide in every part; and

Unless the cellar is effectually drained by means of a drain, the uppermost part of which is one foot at least below the level of the floor thereof; and

Unless there is appurtenant to the cellar the use of a water-closet earth-closet or privy and an ashpit, furnished with proper doors and coverings, according to the provisions of this Act (d); and

Unless the cellar has a fireplace with a proper chimney or flue, and an external window of at least nine superficial feet in area clear of the sash frame, and made to open in a manner approved by the surveyor (e) (except in the case of an inner or back cellar let or occupied along with a front cellar as part of the same letting or occupation, in which case the external window may be of any dimensions not being less than four superficial feet in area clear of the sash frame).

Provided that in any area adjoining a cellar there may be steps necessary for access to such cellar, if the same be so placed as not to be over across or opposite to the said external window, and so as to allow between every part of such steps and the external wall of such cellar a clear space of six inches at the least, and that over or across any such area there may be steps necessary for access to any building above the cellar to which such area adjoins, if the same be so placed as not to be over across or opposite to any such external window.

(a) The penalty for infringement is imposed by the next section. See also note (a) to the preceding section. Note to Section 72.

(b) As to what amounts to occupation "as a dwelling," see s. 74, infra.

(c) This section deals with cellars which were let or occupied in 1848, because by the last section, which re-enacts 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 67, no cellars can have begun to be lawfully occupied as dwellings subsequent to that Act.

(d) See s. 35, ante, p. 96.

(e) See the definition of surveyor in s. 4, ante, p. 7.

73. Any person who lets occupies (a) or knowingly suffers to be occupied for hire or rent (b), any cellar contrary to the provisions of this Act shall be liable for every such offence to a penalty (c) not exceeding twenty shillings for every day during which the same continues to be so let or occupied after notice in writing (d) from the local authority in this behalf. Penalty on persons offending against enactment.

(a) See the next section.

(b) The words for hire or rent do not occur in the two previous sections, which simply make it unlawful to let, occupy, or suffer to be occupied as a dwelling any cellar, etc. There may, therefore, be a contravention of ss. 71 or 72, to which this section does not apply. If so, it would appear that the only remedy would be by indictment for disobedience of a statute, which is a misdemeanor at common law (Archbold's Criminal Pleading, 24th ed., pp. 3—5; and see R. v. Walker, ante, p. 108).

(c) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post.

(d) See as to the authentication and service of notices, ss. 266, 267, post. Care must be taken to serve the notices on the several parties, the lessor and the occupier, according as the proceedings are taken. A form of notice will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 312.

74. Any cellar in which any person passes the night shall be deemed to be occupied as a dwelling within the meaning of this Act. Definition of occupying as a dwelling.

75. Where two convictions against the provisions of any Act (a) relating to the occupation of a cellar as a separate dwelling place have taken place within three months (whether the persons so convicted were or were not the same) a court of summary jurisdiction (b) may direct the closing of the premises so occupied for such time as it may deem necessary, or may empower the local authority permanently to close the same, and to defray any expenses incurred by them in the execution of this section (c). Power to close cellars in case of two convictions.

(a) These words will, doubtless, apply to local Acts which contain provisions to prevent the occupation of cellars as well as to convictions under this Act.

(b) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

(c) There is no provision for enforcing the order, but the disobedience to it would probably be an indictable misdemeanor. See note (b) to s. 73, supra. See also the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 17 (7), post, Vol. II.

Common Lodging-houses (a).

76. Every local authority shall (b) keep a register in which shall be entered the names and residences of the keepers (c) of all common lodging-houses within the district of such authority, and the situation of every such house, and the number of lodgers authorised under this Act by such authority to be received therein. Registers of common lodging-houses to be kept.

Section 76.

A copy of any entry in such register, certified by the clerk of the local authority to be a true copy, shall be received in all courts and on all occasions as evidence, and shall be sufficient proof of the matter registered, without production of the register or of any document or thing on which the entry is founded; and a certified copy of any such entry shall be supplied gratis by the clerk to any person applying at a reasonable time for the same.

Forms for use under this and the following sections will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., pp. 317—321.

"Common lodging-house."

(a) The Common Lodging-houses Act, 1851 and 1853, were the statutes which regulated common lodging-houses, but they are repealed by this Act, except so far as relates to the Metropolitan Police District. (See Schedule V., post.) Their provisions are, however, virtually re-enacted, and any definition or decisions relating to those provisions will doubtless be regarded when construing the Public Health Act. When the Acts of 1851 and 1853 were passed, there was no statutory definition of the term "common lodging-house," although in the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, which contains clauses as to the regulation of common lodging-houses, there was, in s. 116, this definition of a "public lodging-house": "Every house shall be deemed a public lodging-house within the meaning of this Act in which persons are harboured or lodged for hire for a single night, or for less than a week at one time, or any part of which is let for any term less than a week." The General Board of Health, therefore, in 1853, took the opinion of COCKBURN, L.C.J., and Lord HATHERLEY, the then law officers of the Crown, who advised thus: "It may be difficult to give a precise definition of the term 'common lodging-house'; but, looking to the preamble and general provisions of the Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 28), it appears to us to have reference to that class of lodging-house in which persons of the poorer class are received for short periods, and, though strangers to one another, are allowed to inhabit one common room. We are of opinion that it does not include hotels, inns, publichouses, or lodgings let to the upper and middle classes." They afterwards explained the passage as to strangers thus: "Our obvious intention was to distinguish lodgers promiscuously brought together from members of one family or household." And they added that, in their opinion, "the period of letting is unimportant in determining whether a lodging-house comes under the Act now in question." In the memorandum prefixed to the model byelaws issued by the L. G. B. under s. 80, post, p. 156, it is stated that so far as the foregoing definition of a common lodging-house rests upon the basis of the habitation of a common room by lodgers who are strangers to one another in the sense of not being members of one family or household, it may be inferred that this characteristic equally distinguishes the common lodging-houses to which this Act applies; and that such an inference receives support from the terms of s. 87, post, p. 160.

An interpretation of the term "common lodging-house" is contained in s. 89, post, p. 161, but it is not exhaustive, and until the year 1905 it was generally believed that there was no statutory definition of the term "common lodging-house"; but in that year it was discovered that such a definition existed in s. 3 of the Common Lodging-houses Act (Ireland), 1860, which runs thus: "The term 'common lodging-house' shall mean a house in which persons are harboured or lodged for hire for a single night, or for less than a week at a time, or any part of which is let for any term less than a week." This Irish Act was subsequently repealed by the Irish Public Health Act, 1878, but the definition may still be looked at for the purpose of construing the English Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853. See Parker v. Talbot, infra. The existence of the definition clause was discovered by the Court of Appeal during the argument of Parker v. Talbot, [1905] 2 Ch. 643; 70 J. P. 43. In this case it was accordingly held that a lodging-house in which persons of the very poorest class are received without payment of any kind, direct or indirect, the inmates being treated and dealt with in a manner similar to that in which the habitual frequenters of common lodging-houses are treated, was not a common lodging-house within the Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853. An earlier decision of the Divisional Court to the contrary effect (Gilbert v. Jones, [1905] 2 K. B. 691; 69 J. P. 392) was overruled.

"Statutory definition."

Payment necessary.

Note to Section 76.

In Langdon v. Broadbent (1877), 42 J. P. 56; 37 L. T. 434, a lodging-house where hawkers and persons of a similar class were received, staying for various periods, having their meals in one room, and paying sixpence a night, was held to be a common lodging-house within this section (s. 76). GROVE, J., said: "Each case must be decided on its own facts. There may be lodging-houses resorted to by a higher class of persons to which the term 'common lodging-house' would not be applicable. The case does not find whether the lodgers occupied separate sleeping apartments. But I do not think it is necessary to show that the lodgers are all herded together in order to bring the case within the statute. Even if a common room is necessary to constitute a common lodging-house, the evidence here shows that they all took their meals together." And see Halligan v. Ganly; Logsdon v. Trotter, infra. It has now been definitely decided (under the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1902) that a house in which there is no community of eating or sleeping accommodation is not a common lodging-house, but rather a "house let in lodgings" (London C. C. v. Hankins, [1914] 1 K. B. 490; 78 J. P. 137).

Common accommodation necessary.

B. opened a lodging-house for the reception of male lodgers, who slept in one common room capable of accommodating 100 persons. The lodgers were charged, at the discretion of the manager, a sum not exceeding fourpence per night for bed, supper, and breakfast; the house was, however, maintained, not for the purpose of gain, but for the accommodation of the poorest class of persons only, partly with a charitable and partly with a religious object. The house had not been inspected or approved by the officer of the local authority, nor was it registered. B. having been convicted for keeping a common lodging-house in contravention of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 41, s. 3, it was held that the house, being maintained as a charitable institution and not for purposes of gain, was not a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Act, and that the conviction could not be supported (Booth v. Ferrett (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 87; 55 J. P. 7). But this decision must now be regarded as overruled. A common lodging-house is that class of lodging-house in which persons of the poorer class are received for short periods and, although strangers to one another, are allowed to inhabit one common room, and the fact that such a house is not carried on as a business for the sake of profit, but as a humane or charitable enterprise, does not take it out of the measure of sanitary protection provided by the Acts, or prevent it being a common lodging-house within their meaning. The question is not with what object, or from what motive, the house is carried on, but whether the house is such, and is so carried on, as to be within the provisions of the Acts (Logsdon v. Booth, [1900] 1 Q. B. 401; 64 J. P. 165). This decision remains unaffected by the decision in Parker v. Talbot, supra, as was pointed out by COZENS-HARDY, L.J., [1905] 2 Ch., at p. 653.

Charitable institutions included.

The fact that separate sleeping accommodation in cubicles, the other rooms being used in common, is afforded to lodgers, at charges above the ordinary rate paid in common lodging-houses, at an institution promoted by benevolent persons for the benefit of a class of poor persons superior to the "dosser" class, does not render such institution any the less a "common lodging-house" or exempt it from registration and inspection (Logsdon v. Trotter, [1900] 1 Q. B. 617; 64 J. P. 421).

The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 214, provides that the sanitary authority of any seaport town may make byelaws relating to seamen's lodging-houses. See the section set out in App. I., post, Vol. II.

Other statutory provisions as to lodging-houses.

Where the sections as to common lodging-houses (ss. 69—75, constituting Part V. of the Act) contained in the P. H. A., 1907, have been applied to any district the scope of the code upon this subject contained in the Act of 1875 will be considerably enlarged. The Act of 1907 is set out, post, but the sections relating to common lodging-houses are also noticed in their appropriate places in the notes under this and the following sections. Attention should, however, here be called to the provision contained in s. 75 (1) of the 1907 Act, that, "At a time not less than one month before the commencement of this Part of this Act the local authority shall give notice of the fact to the keeper of every common lodging-house in their district."

In London, the Common Lodging-houses Acts, 1851 and 1853, are still in force, and additional provisions as to common lodging-houses (inter alia, as to licensing keepers thereof), are contained in the London County Council (General Powers) Acts, 1902, 1904, and 1907.

What amounts to registration.

(b) Note that this provision is imperative. The keeper of a common lodging-house, having fulfilled the necessary preliminaries under s. 78, applied to be registered under this section, and the authority passed a resolution that his house should be registered. The clerk did not carry out this resolution, and neither the keeper nor his house was formally registered. Eight months afterwards the authority resolved that his house should not be registered, and two months later they prosecuted him for keeping a common lodging-house without being registered. It was held that for the purposes of the Act the resolution of the authority constituted registration and that the justices were right in refusing to convict (Coles v. Fibbens (1884), 49 J. P. 308 ; 52 L. T. 358).

When once a house or keeper has been registered, semble, express statutory authority must be shown for cancelling such registration : see Blake v. Kelly, in notes to s. 88, post, p. 160.

"Keepers."

(c) With regard to the meaning of the word keeper, the law officers already referred to in note (a) advised that where a person neither resides in the house nor exercises any control over its management, but simply receives the rent, he cannot be considered the keeper ; but where the owner, though not resident in the house, either in person or through an agent, colourably or otherwise, exercises control over its management, they had no doubt that he should be considered the keeper. Halligan v. Ganly (1868), 19 L. T. 268, a decision of the Common Pleas in Ireland, which appears at first sight to be contrary to this opinion, will be found to turn entirely on the definitions of public lodging-house and keeper in a local Act (27 & 28 Vict. c. cccv. s. 4). It is not, therefore, an authority on the interpretation of the above section.

"Deputy keepers."

Where s. 71 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, a duty with reference to deputy lodging-house keepers is imposed. By it, "(1) The local authority shall keep a register for the purposes of this section, and shall enter therein the name of any person whose name is submitted to them by a common lodging-house keeper as his deputy, and who is approved by them for the purpose. (2) The local authority may register more than one deputy for any common lodging-house keeper. (3) The local authority, if at any time they are of opinion that any person registered as a deputy of a common lodging-house keeper is not a fit person for the purpose, may cancel the registration."

All common lodging-houses to be registered, and to be kept only by registered keepers.

77. A person shall not (a) keep a common lodging-house or receive a lodger therein unless the house is registered in accordance with the provisions of this Act ; nor unless his name as the keeper thereof is entered in the register kept under this Act : Provided that when the person so registered dies, his widow or any member of his family (b) may keep the house as a common lodging-house for not more than four weeks after his death without being registered as the keeper thereof.

(a) Section 86, post, p. 159, imposes a penalty upon a person who receives a lodger in a common lodging-house which is not registered ; but, apparently, there is no provision under which a person can be summarily convicted for keeping or receiving lodgers in a registered house without being registered as its keeper : semble, he must be proceeded against, if at all, by indictment for the common law misdemeanor of infringing a statutory provision. As to registering "deputy keepers," see note (c) under s. 76.

(b) This is a word of wide extent and difficult to define. It will, doubtless, be best interpreted by the circumstances of each case. There is no authority for confining it to the person's children. See s. 87, post, p. 160.

Local authority

78. A house shall not be registered as a common lodging-house until it has been inspected and approved (a) for the purpose by some officer of the local authority (b) ; and the local authority may refuse (c) to register as the keeper of a common lodging-house a person who does not produce to the local authority a certificate of character, in such form as the local authority direct, signed by three inhabitant householders of the parish respectively rated to the relief of the poor of the parish within which the lodging-house is situate for property of the yearly rateable value (d) of six pounds or upwards. Section 78. may refuse to register houses.

(a) From the Memorandum of the L. G. B., quoted on p. 152, ante, the following observations are taken: To the thoroughness of this inspection much importance should be attached. It is essential that in all structural details the fitness of the premises should be carefully ascertained before the house is placed on the register. The rules which should guide the inspecting officer in his examination of the premises may be thus briefly indicated: The house should (1) possess the conditions of wholesomeness needed for dwelling-houses in general; and (2) it should have arrangements fitting it for its special purpose of receiving a given number of lodgers. Rules for inspection.

(1) The house should be dry in its foundations, and have proper drainage, guttering, and spouting, with properly laid and substantial paving to any area or yard abutting on it. Its drains should have their connections properly made, and they should be trapped when necessary, and adequately ventilated. Except the soil pipe from a properly trapped water-closet, there should be no direct communication of the drains with the interior of the house. All waste pipes from sinks, basins, and cisterns should discharge in the open air over gullies outside the house. The soil pipe should always be efficiently ventilated. The closets and privies and the refuse receptacles of the house should be in proper situations, of proper construction, and adapted to any scavenging arrangements that may be in force in the district. The house should have a water supply of good quality, and, if the water be stored in cisterns, they should be conveniently placed, and of proper construction to prevent any fouling of the water. The walls, roof, and floors of the house should be in good repair. Inside walls should not be papered. The rooms and staircases should possess the means of complete ventilation, windows being of adequate size, able to be opened to their full extent, or if sash windows, both at top and bottom. Any room proposed for registration that has not a chimney should be furnished with a special ventilating opening or shaft, but a room not having a window to the outer air, even if it have special means of ventilation, can seldom be proper for registration.

(2) The numbers for which the house and each sleeping room may be registered will depend partly upon the dimensions of the rooms and their facilities for ventilation, and partly upon the amount of accommodation of other kinds. In rooms of ordinary construction to be used for sleeping, where there are the usual means of ventilation by windows and chimneys, about 300 cubic feet will be a proper standard of space to secure to each person; but in many rooms it will be right to appoint a larger space, and this can only be determined on inspection of the particular room. The house should possess kitchen and day-room accommodation apart from its bedrooms, and the sufficiency of this will have to be attended to. Rooms that are partially underground may not be improper for day-rooms, but should not be registered for use as bedrooms. The amount of water supply, closet, or privy accommodation, and the provision of refuse receptacles should be proportionate to the numbers for which the house is to be registered. If the water is not supplied from works with constant service, a quantity should be secured for daily use on a scale, per registered inmate, of not less than ten gallons a day where there are water-closets, or five gallons a day where there are dry closets. For every twenty registered lodgers a separate closet or privy should be required. The washing accommodation should, wherever practicable, be in a special place and not in the bedroom, and the basins for personal washing should be fixed, and have water taps and discharge pipes connected with them.

(b) The keeper should give notice to the authority and request them to send the proper officer to inspect. That officer is to approve of the house when he has inspected it. It is to be observed that, if the house is inspected and approved, Effect of approval.

Note to Section 78.

the authority have no discretion enabling them to refuse to register. "The Act imposes an obligation on the local authority to complete the registration of a common lodging-house after they once pass over the opportunity for refusal provided by the 78th section" (per MATHEW, J., in Coles v. Fibbens, ante, p. 154). If the officer refuses to approve, the authority are not bound to hear the applicant in support of his application (Ex parte Kavanagh (1894), 10 T. L. R. 533).

Provisions of the P. H. A., 1907, s. 69.

(c) Where s. 69 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, a wider discretion as to registration is given, and new registrations are limited in duration. By it: "(1) The local authority may, at their discretion, refuse to register any person as a common lodging-house keeper, unless they are satisfied of his character and of his fitness for the position. (2) The registration of a person as a common lodging-house keeper shall, if that person is newly registered after the commencement of this section, remain in force only for such time not exceeding one year as may be fixed by the local authority, but may be renewed from time to time by the local authority."

The above section is contained in Part V. of the Act of 1907, and by s. 75 (2): "On and after the commencement of this Part of this Act section seventy-eight from the words 'and the local authority may' to the end of the section, and section eighty-eight of the Public Health Act, 1875, shall be repealed as far as relates to the district."

(d) Probably this means net annual value, which is defined in s. 4, ante, p. 15.

Notice of registration to be affixed to houses.

79. The keeper of every common lodging-house shall, if required in writing by the local authority so to do, affix and keep undefaced and legible a notice with the words, "Registered Common Lodging-house," in some conspicuous place on the outside of such house.

The keeper of any such house who, after requisition in writing from the local authority, refuses or neglects to affix or renew such notice, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds, and to a further penalty of ten shillings for every day that such refusal or neglect continues after conviction.

See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post.

Where s. 72 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied in any district the court may also cancel the registration of the keeper.

Byelaws to be made by local authority.

80. Every local authority shall from time to time make byelaws (a)—

(1) For fixing and from time to time varying (b) the number of lodgers who may be received into a common lodging-house, and for the separation of the sexes therein; and

(2) For promoting cleanliness and ventilation in such houses; and

(3) For the giving of notices and the taking precautions (c) in the case of any infectious disease; and

(4) Generally for the well ordering of such houses (d).

Byelaws.

(a) As to the making of byelaws, see s. 182, post; as to their confirmation, s. 184, post; and as to their enforcement, s. 251, post. Model byelaws are issued by the M. of H. for the use of sanitary authorities under this section; and it will be convenient if these are adopted with as little variation as the circumstances of each case will permit. See Mackenzie and Handford's Model Byelaws, Vol. I., p. 57. For form of resolution adopting byelaws, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 322, and see also, at pp. 324, 325, forms relating to the fixing of maximum number of lodgers.

The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, provides that the sanitary authority within whose district any seaport town is situate may, with the approval of the President of the Board of Trade, from time to time make, revoke, alter, and amend byelaws relating to seamen's lodging-houses in such town. See s. 214 thereof in App. I., post, Vol. II.

Note to Section 80.

(b) The provision for varying the number was new. Lord CAIRNS advised that when the number had been fixed it could not be varied under the previous Acts.

(c) This was new. See s. 84, post, p. 158. See also ss. 120—130, post, pp. 227—237, as to infectious diseases, especially s. 128, which imposes a penalty on persons who let houses or rooms in which infected persons have been lodging.

(d) These are very general words, and apply not only to the state of the house, but, as it seems, to the conduct of the inmates, so that any disorder in a house may be prevented. The model byelaws do not, however, contain any provisions of this nature.

Provisions of the P. H. A., 1907, s. 70.

Where s. 70 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, an obligation is imposed on the keeper or deputy-keeper of a lodging-house to manage and exercise supervision. By it: "(1) Either the keeper of a common lodging-house or a deputy registered under this Act shall manage and control the lodging-house and exercise supervision over those using it, and either the keeper or the deputy so registered shall be and remain at the lodging-house between the hours of nine in the evening and six in the morning of the following day. (2) If any provision of this section is not complied with in the case of any common lodging-house, the keeper of the house shall, unless he shows to the court that there was a reasonable excuse for the non-compliance, be liable in respect of each offence to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings, and to a daily penalty not exceeding twenty shillings."

Power of local authority to require supply of water to houses.

81. Where it appears to any local authority that a common lodging-house is without a proper supply of water for the use of the lodgers, and that such a supply can be furnished thereto at a reasonable rate (a), the local authority may by notice in writing (b) require the owner (c) or keeper of such house, within a time specified therein, to obtain such supply, and to do all works necessary for that purpose (d); and if the notice be not complied with accordingly, the local authority may remove such house from the register until it is complied with.

Provisions of the P. H. A., 1907, s. 74, as to sanitary conveniences.

Where s. 74 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, the provision of proper sanitary conveniences may be enforced. That section provides as follows:

"(1) Every common lodging-house, whether registered before or after the commencement of this section, shall be provided—

"(a) With sufficient and suitable sanitary conveniences, having regard to the number of persons who may be received in that house, and also, where persons of both sexes are received in the common lodging-house, with proper separate accommodation for persons of each sex; and

"(b) With a water supply laid on sufficient for flushing any water-closets or urinals which are used in the house.

"(2) If it appears to the local authority that, in the case of any common lodging-house, default is made in any respect in complying with the provisions of this section, the local authority may, by notice in writing specifying the default, require the keeper of the common lodging-house to remedy the default.

"(3) If within twenty-eight days of the notice being served the default is not remedied to the satisfaction of the local authority, they may themselves do the work required to be done, and may recover in a summary manner from the keeper of the common lodging-house the expenses incurred by them in so doing, or may by order declare these expenses to be private improvement expenses."

(a) It appears that this is a matter for the determination of the local authority. See the general provisions for the supply of water, s. 62, ante, p. 137; and the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, post.

Note to Section 81.

(b) See as to such notice and its service, ss. 266, 267. A form of notice is given in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 327.

(c) See definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. As the notice may be given to the owner or keeper it will be right, if the notice be given to the former, that the latter should also receive information; otherwise his name may be removed from the register without his knowledge. The better plan will be to serve the notice on both.

(d) Query, whether these words enable the authority to specify the works to be done. See the cases on similar words in the notes to s. 94, post, p. 181.

Limewashing of houses.

82. The keeper of a common lodging-house shall, to the satisfaction of the local authority, limewash the walls and ceilings thereof in the first week of each of the months of April and October in every year, and shall if he fails to do so be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings.

This penalty will be over and above what he may be required to do under any byelaw. As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post.

Power to order reports from keepers of houses receiving vagrants.

83. The keeper of a common lodging-house in which beggars or vagrants are received to lodge shall from time to time, if required in writing by the local authority so to do, report to the local authority, or to such person as the local authority direct, every person who resorted to such house during the preceding day or night, and for that purpose schedules shall be furnished by the local authority to the person so ordered to report, which schedules he shall fill up with the information required and transmit to the local authority.

For a form of notice to be given by the authority and also a form of report, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at pp. 328, 329.

If the local authority act upon this section they must specify for what period the report is to be made. The mode of transmission is not stated, but transmission by post will probably be sufficient. Failure to make this report renders the keeper liable to a penalty under s. 86, post, p. 159.

The Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, s. 10, contains provisions as to harbouring thieves or reputed thieves in lodging-houses, or suffering them to meet or assemble therein. Lodging-houses may be searched for idle and disorderly persons, etc., on a warrant under the Vagrancy Act, 1824, s. 13.

Keepers to give notice of fever, etc. therein.

84. The keeper of a common lodging-house shall, when a person in such house is ill of fever or any infectious disease (a), give immediate notice (b) thereof to the medical officer of health (c) of the local authority, and also to the poor law relieving officer of the union or parish in which the common lodging-house is situated (d).

(a) See the provisions of ss. 120—130, post, pp. 227—237, as to infectious diseases. The byelaws under s. 80, ante, p. 156, may contain provisions similar in effect to this section.

See also the provisions of the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, post.

(b) This statute does not require notice in writing, and in cases in which it is not superseded by the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, a verbal notice may be held to be sufficient, but it is most desirable that it should be in writing. For form of notice, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 326. The model byelaws require a written notice to be given (No. 18) (Mackenzie and Handford's Model Byelaws, Vol. I., p. 68). The duty to give notice is absolute, and want of personal knowledge will not excuse the keeper if his deputy was aware of the case (Logsdon v. Holland (1898), 14 T. L. R. 449 ; 42 Sol. J. 523). Note to Section 84.

(c) The Common Lodging-Houses Act, 1851, s. 11, required the notice to be given to the medical officer of the union, but now it is to be given to the medical officer of health of the authority appointed under s. 189 or s. 190, post.

(d) Section 124, post, p. 231, provides for the removal of the sick person to a hospital in certain cases.

See s. 86, infra, as to the penalty of non-compliance with the provisions of this section. In places where the P. H. A., 1890, is in operation the keeper will be liable to a penalty under s. 32 of that Act. See that section and the notes thereto, post.

85. The keeper of a common lodging-house, and every other person having or acting in the care or management thereof, shall, at all times when required by any officer (a) of the local authority, give him free access to such house or any part thereof ; and any such keeper or person who refuses such access shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds (b). As to inspection.

(a) The section does not require such officer to produce any specific authority for his demand of inspection, thus varying 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 66. Moreover, the limitation of the hours of admission therein specified is omitted.

The keeper of a common lodging-house, on access to the house being demanded by two officers of a local authority, refused access (1) to a room which opened off a licensed room and could only be entered through it (this room had not been observed when the premises were inspected with a view to the licence being granted, and was not itself licensed) ; (2) to two rooms which were licensed, but which he had shut off entirely from the rest of the house, which had a separate entrance to the street, and which, after giving notice to the local authority that he had ceased to use them as part of the lodging-house, he had let to a monthly tenant :—Held, that in refusing access to the first-mentioned room he had contravened the statute, but otherwise in regard to the other two rooms (Gunn v. Cadenhead (1888), 15 Ct. of Sess. Cas., 4th series (J. C.) 57).

(b) See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post.

86. Any keeper of a common lodging-house who— Offences by keepers of houses.

(1) Receives any lodger in such house without the same being registered under this Act (a) ; or

(2) Fails to make a report, after he has been furnished by the local authority with schedules for the purpose in pursuance of this Act (b), of the persons resorting to such house ; or

(3) Fails to give the notice required by this Act where any person has been confined to his bed in such house by fever or other infectious disease (c), shall be liable to a penalty (d) not exceeding five pounds, and in the case of a continuing offence to a further penalty not exceeding forty shillings for every day during which the offence continues (e).

(a) See s. 77, ante, p. 154. Possibly registration under previous sanitary Acts may suffice, but it would be advisable to register again under this Act. As to what amounts to registration, see Coles v. Fibbens, ante, p. 154. Where s. 73 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, it dispels any doubt as to whether an unregistered keeper is liable to penalties under this section.

(b) See s. 83, ante, p. 158.

Note to Section 86.

(c) See s. 84, ante, p. 158. See also the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, and the P. H. A., 1890, post. The last-mentioned Act, by s. 32 (where it is in force), imposes a penalty of forty shillings and a daily penalty of five shillings if the keeper of a lodging-house fails to give notice under s. 84, ante, p. 158, even when the person suffering from fever, etc. has not been "confined to his bed."

(d) See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post.

(e) There is no reference here to breach of the byelaws, as this is provided for in ss. 183, 251, post. The continuing here, it is presumed, must refer to offences against sub-ss. (2), (3).

Evidence as to "family" in proceedings.

87. In any proceedings under the provisions of this Act relating to common lodging-houses, if the inmates of any house or part of a house allege that they are members of the same family (a), the burden of proving such allegation shall lie on the person making it.

(a) It does not appear why the allegation should be made. The corresponding s. 41 of the Sanitary Act, 1866, was applicable to prosecutions for overcrowding, but no such mischief is provided for in lodging-houses specially. It may be material, however, with reference to the question whether a house is a lodging-house or not: see s. 76, note (a), ante, p. 152. It may also be material when considering an alleged infringement of a byelaw whereby provision is made for the separation of the sexes, where the family is young and consists of both sexes.

It may be doubtful what is meant by the word family. See s. 77, ante, p. 154, and s. 91, post, p. 165, where the word occurs again.

Conviction for third offence to disqualify persons from keeping common lodging-houses.

88. Where the keeper of a common lodging-house is convicted of a third offence against any of the provisions of this Act (a) relating to common lodging-houses, the court before whom the conviction for such third offence takes place may, if it thinks fit, adjudge that he shall not at any time within five years after the conviction, or within such shorter period after the conviction as the court thinks fit, keep a common lodging-house without the previous licence in writing of the local authority, which licence the local authority may withhold or grant on such terms and conditions as they think fit.

(a) It is very doubtful whether convictions under previous Acts can be brought under the purview of this section. The section is penal, and will probably be construed strictly, in accordance with the general rule for the interpretation of penal statutes.

Forms of licence and of application for licence under s. 88, supra, will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 332.

As to the punishment of an unregistered person who keeps a common lodging-house, see notes to s. 77, ante, p. 154.

Section 72 of the P. H. A., 1907, provides that: "Where the keeper of a common lodging-house is convicted of any offence against any provision of the Public Health Acts or this Act relating to common lodging-houses, or of any byelaw made thereunder, the court before whom he is convicted may cancel his registration as a common lodging-house keeper, and he shall cease to be registered accordingly." But this section will only be operative in those districts in which it is applied by an Order of the M. of H. In any district in which Part V. of the Act of 1907 (which includes s. 72, supra) is applied, s. 88 of the Act of 1875 will be repealed. See s. 75 (2) of the Act of 1907.

K. was duly entered in the register of the B. authority as keeper of a common lodging-house. Two months later the inspector reported that it was kept as a house of bad repute, and the health committee, by resolution, purported to cancel K.'s registration, and ordered him to clear out his lodgers in a week. On his refusal he was charged with keeping the house without being registered:—Held, the justices were right in dismissing the information, as there was no power to cancel the registration except for the reasons set forth in the statute (Blake v. Kelly (1887), 52 J. P. 263). Note to Section 88.

89. For the purposes of this Act the expression "common lodging-house" includes, in any case in which only part of a house is used as a common lodging-house, the part so used of such house. Interpretation of "common lodging-house."

It is difficult to say who is the keeper of the lodging-house in this case, whether the person who is the landlord or tenant of the whole house or the tenant of that part which is let and is so appropriated to the use of lodgers.

See the observations as to the difference in the meaning of the words "includes" and "means," p. 6, ante, and see the note on s. 76, ante, p. 152, as to the meaning of the expression "common lodging-house."

Byelaws as to Houses let in Lodgings (a).

90. The Local Government Board may, if they think fit, by notice published in the London Gazette, declare the following enactment to be in force within the district or any part of the district of any local authority, and from and after the publication of such notice such authority (b) shall be empowered to make byelaws (c) for the following matters; (that is to say,) Power of local authority to make byelaws as to houses let in lodgings.

(1) For fixing and from time to time varying the number of persons who may occupy a house or part of a house which is let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family (d), and for the separation of the sexes in a house so let or occupied:

(2) For the registration of houses so let or occupied:

(3) For the inspection of such houses:

(4) For enforcing drainage and the provision of privy accommodation for such houses (e), and for promoting cleanliness and ventilation in such houses:

(5) For the cleansing and lime-washing at stated times (f) of the premises, and for the paving of the courts and courtyards thereof:

(6) For the giving of notices and the taking of precautions in case of any infectious disease (g).

This section shall not apply to common lodging-houses within the provisions of this Act relating to common lodging-houses (h).

(a) The scope of byelaws made under this section has been enlarged by s. 26 of the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1919, which see post, Vol. II. In many decisions a distinction has been drawn between houses which are let in separate tenements, the landlord retaining no control over the house; and houses in which, though some or all of the rooms are let, the landlord resides personally or by an agent, and exercises some control. The tenants of the tenements in the former case were held not to be lodgers within the meaning of the Registration Acts in Bradley v. Baylis (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 195; 45 J. P. 847; Ancketill v. Baylis (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 577; 47 J. P. 356. These decisions appear to be of general application, and if so, they limit the number of houses to which this section applies. In Bradley v. Baylis, "Lodgers" and "lodgings."

Note to Section 90.

supra, JESSEL, M.R., made the following observations: "First of all, take the case of a lodger. It seems to me, as to unfurnished lodgings (and I will only deal with unfurnished lodgings, as it is the only class of cases with reference to which questions are likely to arise), where the owner of the house does not let the whole of it, but retains a part of his own residence and resides there, and when he does not let out the passages, staircase, and outer door, but gives to the inmates merely a right of ingress and egress, and retains to himself the general control, with the right of interfering—I do not mean an actual interference, but a right to interfere, a right to turn out trespassers, and so on—there I consider such owner is the occupying tenant of the house, and the inmate, whether he has or has not the exclusive use of the room, is a lodger. That is one extreme case. Now, I take another case, where the landlord lets out the whole of the house into separate apartments, and lets out each floor separately, so as to demise the passages, reserving simply to each inmate of the upper floors the right of ingress and egress over the lower passages, but parts entirely with the whole legal ownership, for the term demised, and retains no control over the house; there, in my opinion, the inmates are occupying tenants, and are capable of being rated as such. That is an extreme case on the other side. There will be an immense number of intermediate cases, which, as I said before, can only be dealt with as they arise. Take such a case as the first of those before us. Does it make any difference that the inmates have latch-keys to the outer door and also keys to the inner door? I think not. Does it make any difference that the landlord does not reside there personally, but has resident servants who occupy on his behalf part of the house? I think not. I think that the inmates are still lodgers. Does it make any difference that the landlord does or does not repair? I think not; they are still lodgers."

When rooms in a house are let out to separate occupiers the mere fact that the landlord resides in a separate set of rooms in the house does not of itself convert such occupiers from inhabitant occupiers into lodgers. But such occupiers are merely lodgers when the resident landlord has a right of control over their rooms (Kent v. Fittall, [1906] 1 K. B. 60; 69 J. P. 428). See also Phillips v. Henson (1877), 3 C. P. D. 26; 42 J. P. 137; Morton v. Palmer (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 89; 46 J. P. 150; Ness v. Stephenson (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 245; 47 J. P. 134; Douglas v. Smith, [1907] 2 K. B. 568; 71 J. P. 433; R. v. Bell (1907), 71 J. P. 542; 24 T. L. R. 66; Kent v. Fittall (No. 3), [1909] 1 K. B. 215; 73 J. Kent v. Fittall (No. 4), supra, was distinguished in Smith v. Newman, [1912] 1 K. B. 162; 76 J. P. 25, and followed in Havercroft v. Dewey (1913), 77 J. P. 115; 108 L. T. 296.

In Ness v. Stephenson, supra, it was held that if the landlord, reserving a room in a house, lets the rest of it to a person, but retains such control and dominion over it as is usually retained by masters of houses let in lodgings, the relation of landlord and lodger may exist between the parties for the purposes of such an Act as the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (see now the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1908), although the lodger has the right of exclusively occupying the greater part of the premises and has separate and uncontrolled power of ingress and egress, and neither the landlord nor his agent sleeps or resides in the house and his lodger acts as caretaker of the part reserved; and that the existence of the relationship of landlord and lodger is a question of fact. In a later case decided with reference to the same Act, the appellant occupied the first floor and basement of premises at a yearly rent, carrying on the business of a publisher there, but sleeping and residing elsewhere. He had no key of the outer door, which was under the control of his immediate landlord, who admitted him every morning. It was held that he was not a lodger. A lodger in the popular sense of the word means one who sleeps on the premises (Heawood v. Bone (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 179; 48 J. P. 710).

A byelaw made under this section required certain particulars to be furnished to the authority by the occupier of houses let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family. On a summons under this byelaw, it was proved that B. was the tenant of a house, sub-letting unfurnished rooms to one person and occupying the rest of the house herself. It was held that the house was a "lodging-house" within the meaning of the byelaw and that there was nothing unreasonable in a byelaw applying to such a house (Roots v. Beaumont (1886), 51 J. P. 197). See also as to the meaning of the expression "house which is let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family," cases in note (d), infra.

The L. G. B. issued model byelaws under this section. See Mackenzie and Handford's Model Byelaws, Vol. I., p. 445. In the memorandum prefixed to the byelaws it is stated that the Board have had regard to the remarks of the judges in the case of Langdon v. Broadbent (p. 153, ante), and have exempted from the operation of the byelaws certain houses let in lodgings which from their character are not likely to require supervision. The memorandum states that the exemption clause consists of two sections, of which one relates to unfurnished, and the other to furnished lodgings. It assumes that all houses below a certain rateable value will, if let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family, be within the scope of the byelaws. In the case of houses of higher rateable value the clause confers exemption if the rent of each lodger exceeds a certain minimum. It will rest with the local authority, when framing byelaws upon the basis of the model series, to determine what limits of rateable value or rent the circumstances of their district may render it desirable to prescribe.

For form of resolution adopting byelaws, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 322.

(b) By the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 8, post, Vol. II., local authorities are now empowered to make byelaws under this section without any declaration by the M. of H. The effect of this enactment is practically to repeal the opening words of this section down to and including the word "notice."

(c) Model byelaws have been issued by the M. of H. As to the making, confirmation, publication, and enforcing of byelaws, see ss. 182—186, 251, post. As to the houses which should be affected by such byelaws, see note (a), supra. Byelaws.

By the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 16, the power of making and enforcing byelaws under this section (or in London under the similar section (s. 94) of the P. H. (London) A., 1891), is now, in the case of houses intended for the working classes, extended to the making and enforcing of byelaws imposing any duty (being a duty which may be imposed by the byelaws, and which involves the execution of work) upon the owner in addition to or in substitution for any other person having an interest in the premises. For the purpose of discharging any duty so imposed the owner or other person is given a right of entry. See s. 16 (1), (2) in extenso, post, Vol. II. These provisions get rid of the difficulty disclosed in Arlidge v. Islington Borough Council, infra.

If an owner or other person fails to execute any work which he has been required to execute under the byelaws, the authority may, after giving the prescribed notice, execute such work at his expense (Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 16 (3), post, Vol. II.).

See also the further enlargement of the scope of byelaws made under this section enacted in s. 26 of the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1919, Vol. II., post.

Byelaws made under the similar section (s. 94) of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, provided "that the landlord in the first week in April in every year, and at such other times as the condition thereof may render it necessary, shall cause every part of the premises of a house let in lodgings or inhabited by members of more than one family to be cleansed, and the ceilings and interior walls to be lime-washed." In one case "landlord" was defined as the person who received the rack-rent of the premises; and in the other case the definition included the person who received the profits arising from the letting of the house as a lodging-house. It was held in each case that the byelaw was unreasonable, and therefore invalid, because it did not provide for notice being given to the landlord, who was the person made responsible, and who might have no knowledge of any offence being committed. It was held, also, by Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., and KENNEDY, J., WILLS, J., dissenting, that the byelaw in requiring the work to be done throughout a whole borough in one week (which might be Easter week) was not unreasonable (Stiles v. Galinski; Nokes and Nokes v. Islington Borough Council (No. 2), [1904] 1 K. B. 615; 68 J. P. 183). A byelaw made under the same section provided that: "Subject to the provisions of these byelaws the landlord of a lodging-house shall, in the month of April, May, or June in every year, cause every part of the premises to be cleansed . . ." The word "landlord" was defined by the byelaws to mean, in relation to a lodging-house, the person for the time being receiving the rack-rent of the lodging-house, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such premises were let at a rack-rent. It was held that the byelaw was unreasonable and therefore invalid, as it cast upon landlords an obligation which they might not be able to obey without committing a breach of contract or a trespass (Arlidge v. Islington Borough Council, [1909] 2 K. B. 127; 73 J. P. 201); but see now s. 16 of the Act of 1909, supra.

Note to Section 90.

A byelaw was proposed by an urban district council requiring the landlord of a lodging-house on receiving from the council a notice or placard wherein should be stated the description or number and the dimensions or cubical contents of the room to which such notice or placard may apply, and the maximum number of persons authorised to be received at any one time in such room, to put up, affix and continue such notice or placard in a suitable and conspicuous position in such room, and in such a manner that the words and figures in such notice or placard may be clearly and distinctly visible and legible. Also that neither he nor a lodger in the lodging-house should at any time wilfully conceal, deface, alter or obliterate any letter or figure in such notice or placard, or wilfully or carelessly injure or destroy such notice or placard. The L. G. B. took the view that it could not be accepted as within the powers of the district council under the section.

(d) See the notes on this word in ss. 77 and 87, ante, pp. 154, 160. The expression "house let in lodgings or occupied by members of more than one family" occurs also in s. 94 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, and in a case under that section it was held that a block of artisans' dwellings, where the landlord did not reside, and which was divided into tenements occupied severally by different families, was not such a house, and that therefore the authority had no power to make byelaws for the regulation of the building (Weatheritt v. Cantlay, [1901] 2 K. B. 285; 65 J. P. 644). In a later case it was decided that the following was such a house, viz.: an ordinary six-roomed house not specially constructed to be let in separate tenements, which had a common staircase and one common front door which was always kept open; on each floor were two rooms let to and occupied by a separate family; and the landlord did not reside on the premises or have any representative residing there (Kyffin v. Simmons (1903), 67 J. P. 227; 1 L. G. R. 381).

Separation of sexes.

In the model series above mentioned the L. G. B. deemed it inexpedient to provide for a variation of the number of occupants or for the separation of the sexes. The omission of the latter provision is due "to the doubt which the Board entertained as to how far this desirable object can be practically attained, in view of the ordinary conditions of life in lodgings of the poorer class. When, however, the local authority are satisfied that a rule on this subject can be enforced without hardship, as, for instance, in cases where it is found that individual holdings in the lodging-houses of a district generally comprise two or more rooms, the Board readily co-operated with the authority in framing a byelaw to provide for the separation of the sexes."

Drainage.

(e) These byelaws will not prevent the enforcing of the provisions of this Act which apply to these matters. No byelaws as to drainage are included in the model series, as the Board considered the statutory provisions on this subject to be sufficient without them.

Cleansing, etc.

(f) These times must be stated in the byelaws. As to the reasonableness of a time so fixed, see Stiles v. Galinski, supra. See s. 82, ante, p. 158, as to common lodging-houses.

Infectious disease.

(g) Byelaws for these purposes are now unnecessary in view of the provisions of the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, and the Infectious Disease (Notification) Extension Act, 1899, post.

(h) This passage was introduced from the Sanitary Act, 1866, s. 36, which was passed when the Common Lodging-house Acts were in force.

NUISANCES (a).

91. For the purposes of this Act— Definition of nuisances.

1. Any premises (b) in such a state (c) as to be a nuisance or injurious to health (d) :
2. Any pool ditch gutter watercourse privy urinal cesspool drain or ashpit (e) so foul or in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health (d) :
3. Any animal (f) so kept as to be a nuisance or injurious to health (d) :
4. Any accumulation or deposit (g) which is a nuisance or injurious to health (d) :
5. Any house or part of a house so overcrowded as to be dangerous or injurious to the health of the inmates, whether or not members of the same family (h) :
6. Any factory, workshop, or workplace not already under the operation of any general Act for the regulation of factories or bakehouses (i), not kept in a cleanly state, or not ventilated in such a manner as to render harmless as far as practicable any gases vapours dust or other impurities generated in the course of the work carried on therein that are a nuisance or injurious to health (d), or so overcrowded while work is carried on as to be dangerous or injurious to the health of those employed therein (k) :
7. Any fireplace or furnace which does not as far as practicable consume the smoke (l) arising from the combustible used therein, and which is used for working engines by steam, or in any mill factory dyehouse brewery bakehouse or gaswork, or in any manufacturing or trade process whatsoever ; and
8. Any chimney (m) (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house (n)) sending forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance (o), shall be deemed to be nuisances (p) liable to be dealt with summarily in manner provided by this Act : Provided—

First (q). That a penalty shall not be imposed on any person in respect of any accumulation or deposit necessary for the effectual carrying on any business or manufacture if it be proved to the satisfaction of the court that the accumulation or deposit has not been kept longer than is necessary for the purposes of the business or manufacture, and that the best available means have been taken for preventing injury thereby to the public (r) health :

Secondly (s). That where a person is summoned before any court in respect of a nuisance arising from a fireplace or furnace which does not consume the smoke arising from the combustible used in such fireplace or furnace, the court shall hold that no nuisance is created within the meaning of this Act and dismiss the complaint, if it is satisfied that such fireplace or furnace is constructed in such manner as to consume as far as practicable, having regard to the nature of the manufacture or trade, all smoke, arising therefrom, and that such fireplace or furnace has been carefully attended to by the person having the charge thereof.

Extension of term by the P. H. A., 1907, s. 35.

(a) Where s. 35 of the P. H. A., 1907, has been applied to any district, the class of nuisances specified in s. 91, supra, as nuisances liable to be dealt with summarily, will be extended so as to include the following:

"(1) Any cistern used for the supply of water for domestic purposes so placed, constructed, or kept as to render the water therein liable to contamination, causing or likely to cause risk to health;

"(2) Any gutter, drain, shoot, stack-pipe, or down-spout of a building which by reason of its insufficiency or its defective condition shall cause damp in such building or in an adjoining building; and

"(3) Any deposit of material in or on any building or land which shall cause damp in such building or in an adjoining building so as to be dangerous or injurious to health."

See also s. 46 of the same Act as to cesspools, ashpits, etc., wells and disused wells.

For a definition of a public nuisance, see the note under s. 111, post, p. 210.

"Premises."

(b) See the definition of "premises" in s. 4, ante, p. 7.

Sewage works and public sewers not included.

It has been held that these words do not apply to a nuisance arising from sewage tanks and works constructed under this Act by a local authority, and that a court of summary jurisdiction has, therefore, no power, on proof of a nuisance so caused, to make an order for its abatement (R. v. Parlby (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 520; 53 J. P. 327). WILLS, J., said (ibid.): "It is clear that the expression 'premises in such a state as to be a nuisance' has not the wide application claimed for it by the respondents, who say that it is answered by any premises on which a nuisance exists. If that were so, the enumeration of, at all events, the several kinds of nuisance specified under the subsequent heads would be unnecessary. We do not attempt to define every class of case to which the first head applies, but we think it is confined to cases in which the premises themselves are decayed, dilapidated, dirty, or out of order, as, for instance, where houses have been inhabited by tenants whose habits and ways of life have rendered them filthy or impregnated with disease, or where foul matter has been allowed to soak into walls or floors, or where they are so dilapidated as to be a source of danger to life or limb." So, too, the provisions of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, for the abatement of nuisances do not apply to a nuisance alleged to arise from a public sewer vested in the London County Council, and a court of summary jurisdiction has no power to deal with such an alleged nuisance (Fulham Vestry v. London C. C., [1897] 2 Q. B. 76; 61 J. P. 440).

Therefore, if a nuisance arises from sewage works, the persons aggrieved are left to their remedy by action. An injunction in such a case was granted in Downing v. Falmouth United Sewerage Board (1888), 4 T. L. R. 552.

Tents, vans, etc.

By the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 9, post, Vol. II., a tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation, which is in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health, or which is so overcrowded as to be injurious to the health of the inmates, whether or not members of the same family, is to be deemed to be a nuisance within the meaning of this section. See also Att.-Gen. v. Brown and Att.-Gen. v. Stone, post, p. 168.

"In such a state" as to be, etc.

(c) The words of the clause are "premises in such a state," etc. It would appear, therefore, that they apply only to premises which are a nuisance by reason of their condition, and not to premises which are a nuisance by reason of the purposes for which they are used. Thus, it is submitted that they would not apply to premises used for an offensive trade so long as the condition of the premises was not in question. Nor would they apply to a building which was a nuisance only by reason of its being used as a hospital for infectious diseases, as in Metropolitan Asylums District v. Hill (1881), 6 App. Cas. 193; 45 J. P. 664. There it was held that an asylum for the reception of poor persons suffering from smallpox or other infectious or contagious disorders may be a nuisance restrainable by injunction, though erected and maintained under the provisions of an Act which enables, but does not order, such asylums to be erected; and see Bendelow v. Wortley Union (Guardians of) (1887), 4 T. L. R. 67, and Garton v. Guildford, Godalming and Woking Joint Hospital Board, Times, March 23rd, 1895. On the other hand, it is submitted that a house which is a nuisance by reason of its being ruinous and likely to fall down might be a nuisance within this section. A house in such a condition may be a nuisance at common law (R. v. Watts (1703), 1 Salk. 357). See also s. 160, post, p. 363, as to ruinous and dangerous buildings. As to the liability of a person for allowing premises to be out of repair, and so a nuisance whereby injury is caused, see Payne v. Rogers (1794), 2 H. Bl. 350; Chauntler v. Robinson (1849), 4 Ex. 163; Leslie v. Pounds (1812), 4 Taunt. 649; Todd v. Flight (1860), 9 C. B. P. 377, decided under the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, ss. 14, 15.

For an Irish case in which an unsuccessful attempt was made to prove that premises, viz., one flat in a house, were in such a state as to be a nuisance and injurious to health because the tenant of that flat had to pass through the lower flat in order to reach the only water-closet, see Belfast Corporation v. Thompson, on p. 100, ante.

In Att.-Gen. (ex rel. Strand District Board of Works) v. Kirk (1896), 12 T. L. R. 514, the plaintiff moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant, a builder, from allowing an excavation or trench in a street to remain open, and from allowing the footpath on one side of the street to remain without a proper pavement. The defendant contended that the licence from the relators under which he opened the street had expired, and that in consequence of his having failed to carry out a building agreement in respect of a site adjoining the street the freeholder had determined it and claimed possession of the site. The Court of Appeal, finding that the defendant was not out of possession, restrained him so far as was necessary for the interim protection of the public, i.e., from allowing the excavation or trench to remain so as to be dangerous to the street, or the sewer or the adjoining houses, and also from allowing it to remain in such a state as to be or create a nuisance, or to be or become injurious to the public health.

As to a nuisance from an accumulation of soil causing damp to an adjoining house, whereby it becomes unhealthy, see Hurdman v. N. E. Rail. Co. (1878), 3 C. P. D. 168; 42 J. P. 388. See hereon s. 35 of the P. H. A., 1907, post. In Stearn v. Prentice, [1919] 1 K. B. 394, a bone manure manufactory which had been carried on for thirty years without complaint attracted rats which did damage to the plaintiffs' crops situated a short distance away. It was held that no cause of action had been established against the defendants.

It is at common law the duty of an owner of vacant land to prevent it from being a public nuisance, although such nuisance may be caused by the acts of others; and the Attorney-General, on behalf of the public, is entitled to an injunction to prevent an owner committing a breach of that duty (Att.-Gen. v. Tod-Heatley, [1897] 1 Ch. 560). See also Chibnall v. Paul & Son, infra; and see the P. H. A., 1907, s. 31, post, as to fencing vacant land.

In Att.-Gen. v. Brown and Others, Times, July 23rd, 1898, application was made for an injunction to restrain a landowner and two gipsies, from using or permitting to be used a small piece of ground as a gipsy encampment, so as to cause a nuisance. NORTH, J., on the landowner undertaking not to relet the land on any future occasion for a similar purpose, refrained from granting an injunction against her, but granted an interlocutory injunction restraining the gipsies from using or occupying the land for the encampment of gipsies or like people without previously making sanitary arrangements to the satisfaction of the relators. See also Att.-Gen. v. Stone (1895), 60 J. P. 168. For a case in which it was alleged that a seaside encampment was a nuisance, see Att.-Gen. v. Kerr and Ball (1915), 79 J. P. 51; 12 L. G. R. 1277.

Whenever the legislature has authorised a proprietor to make a particular use of his land, and the authority is permissive and not imperative, the legislature must be held to have intended that the use sanctioned is not to be in prejudice of the common law rights of others (Canadian Pacific Rail. Co. v. Parke, [1899] A. C. 535).

"Nuisance or injurious to health."

(d) Upon similar words in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 10, it was held that the dripping of water from a railway bridge on to the road beneath was not a nuisance within the Act (G. W. Rail. Co. v. Bishop (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 550; 37 J. P. 5). But though the word nuisance as used in this section does not include every common law nuisance (see also note (o), infra), it is not necessary that a nuisance in order to be within the section should also be injurious to health, for the terms used are disjunctive, nuisance or injurious. It is sufficient if the nuisance is one which interferes with personal comfort (per STEPHEN, J., in Bishop Auckland L. B. v. Bishop Auckland Iron Co. (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 138; 47 J. P. 389). In that case an accumulation or deposit of cinders, ashes, and refuse which was allowed to smoulder and throw off strong fumes, was held to be a nuisance and within this section, though it was not injurious to health. See also Banbury Sanitary Authority v. Page (decided upon similar words in s. 47) (1881), 8 Q. B. D. 97; 46 J. P. 184; Malton Sanitary Authority v. Malton Farmers' Manure Co. (1879), 4 Ex. D. 302; 44 J. P. 155; Houldershaw v. Martin (1885), 49 J. P. 179; 1 T. L. R. 323.

(e) As to this clause, see generally ss. 41, 47, ante, pp. 105, 116, and s. 45 of the P. H. A., 1907. As to gutters or drains causing damp in buildings, see s. 35 (2) of the Act of 1907, and as to cesspools, ashpits, etc., wells or disused wells, see ibid., s. 46.

What "drains," etc. within the section.

It must be observed that this clause relates only to a "drain," not to a "sewer." See per WILLS, J., in R. v. Parlby, ante, p. 166, and Fulham (Vestry of) v. London C. C., ante, p. 166. See also Fordom v. Parsons, Molloy v. Gray, and Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, cited at length on p. 51, ante.

An owner of a publichouse erected a urinal in a private passage leading out of the street, and enclosed it between doors, which he kept locked at night. There was a space between the line of area railings in the street and the urinal door nearest to the street, which space he shut off from the street by an iron gate flush with the line of railings. This gate was never locked. Persons habitually used the space between the door and the gate in such a manner as to cause to the neighbours a nuisance, which he took no steps to prevent:—Held, by KAY, J., that he was responsible for such user, it being a probable consequence of the way in which he had arranged the premises (Chibnall v. Paul & Son (1881), 29 W. R. 536).

The appellants were entitled to discharge refuse from their chemical works by two separate drains into a public sewer. One drain discharged liquid impregnated with muriatic acid, and the other liquid impregnated with sulphur. Upon their combination in the sewer sulphuretted hydrogen gas was produced, which escaped in sufficient quantities to be injurious to the public health. No nuisance existed in the appellant's drains. The respondents had not properly flushed, cleansed and trapped the sewer. Upon complaint by the respondents of the escape of the sulphuretted hydrogen gas, justices made an order for the abatement thereof on the appellants:—Held, that the escape of the gas was a nuisance within the meaning of the corresponding provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 8; that it arose from the acts of the appellants, and that the respondents could lawfully make complaint thereof, although they themselves might have contributed to the existence of the nuisance (St. Helen's Chemical Co. v. Corporation of St. Helen's (1876), 1 Ex. D. 196; 40 J. P. 471). It is to be observed that this decision was given with reference to 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, which contains no definition of "drain" and "sewer," and it may be questioned whether the decision is applicable to this section.

In districts where ss. 16 and 17 of the P. H. A., 1890, post, are in force, it is an offence to turn into a sewer any injurious matter or any chemical waste, steam, heated water, etc. which alone or in combination with the sewage causes a nuisance or is dangerous or injurious to health. And see as to a noxious trade effluent, Liverpool Corporation v. Coghill, [1918] 1 Ch. 307; 82 J. P. 129.

The appellants' predecessor in title deposited with the respondents a plan providing for the draining of certain houses into cesspools. The cesspools were not, however, constructed, and the appellants' predecessors, without permission, turned the slop and scullery water from the houses into a surface water drain, made by the respondents upon a highway upon which the houses abutted. The slop and scullery water passed through the drain into an open ditch and caused a nuisance. The respondents had not constructed any sewer by means of which the appellants could drain their houses. Upon a summons under s. 95 of the P. H. A., 1875, the justices made an order upon the appellants to abate the nuisance:—Held, that the nuisance arose from the want of a "structural convenience" within the meaning of s. 94, and that the order was therefore properly made; and held, further, that although the surface water drain was a "sewer" within the definition in s. 4, the appellants, even if they had given the notice prescribed by s. 21, would not have been entitled to use it to carry off their slop and scullery water (Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole Corporation, [1899] 2 Q. B. 41; 63 J. P. 580). See also the cases cited along with the last-mentioned case on pp. 79, 80, ante.

See R. v. Pedly (1834), 1 A. & E. 822, as to the erection and use of privies which became a nuisance for want of cleansing; Russell v. Shenton (1842), 3 Q. B. 449, as to a nuisance from omitting to cleanse drains.

Under the L. G. A., 1894, s. 8 (1), a parish council have power to deal with any pond, pool, open ditch, drain, or place containing or used for the collection of any drainage, filth, stagnant water, or matter likely to be prejudicial to health by draining, cleansing, covering it, or otherwise preventing it from being prejudicial to health, but so as not to interfere with any private right or the sewage or drainage works of any local authority. But by s. 8 (3) nothing in the section is to derogate from any obligation of a district council with respect to the execution of sanitary works.

Keeping of animals.

(f) See s. 44, ante, p. 113, as to byelaws relating to the keeping of animals on premises; and s. 47 as to keeping swine in a dwelling-house, or so as to be a nuisance to any person. The proceedings under this and the following sections may in some cases be preferable to that under the byelaws or under s. 47. It will be observed that the byelaws under s. 44 relate only to the keeping of animals so as to be injurious to health. Again, s. 47 relates only to the keeping of swine, while this section applies generally to the keeping of any animals. The above provision is therefore much more extended in scope than either of the former sections. In addition to the cases cited in the notes to ss. 44, 47, Draper v. Sperring (1861), 25 J. P. 566; 10 C. B. (N.S.) 113, may be referred to. There sheep droppings in a market were held to amount to a nuisance.

As to the burial of carcases washed on shore, see the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894, s. 46; The Suevic, [1908] P. 292; 72 J. P. 407, and the Horses (Importation and Transit) Order, 1913, s. 19.

"Deposits."

(g) As to this clause, see the first proviso to the section. On the subject generally, see ss. 42, 43, 49, ante, and cases cited in the notes thereto, and Draper v. Sperring, supra.

As to deposits causing damp in buildings, see the P. H. A., 1907, s. 35 (3), post, and Hurdman v. N. E. Rail. Co., p. 167, ante. Where a stableman kept dung accumulating so that the neighbours had to shut their windows, he was held liable to be convicted under a local Act which imposed a penalty on offensive matter being kept so as to cause a nuisance (Smith v. Waghorn (1863), 27 J. P. 744). As to an accumulation of seaweed in a harbour, see Margate Pier and Harbour Proprietors v. Margate Town Council (1869), 33 J. P. 437; 20 L. T. 564.

Note to Section 91.

In an action against a railway company for an alleged nuisance arising from smells proceeding from open trucks loaded with house refuse which were allowed to stand some hours at a junction, the court refused to grant an injunction on the ground that there was no remissness on the part of the company in the forwarding of the trucks, and that they were acting reasonably in carrying the refuse to the junction and detaining it there (Att.-Gen. v. S. E. & C. Rail. Cos.' Managing Committee (1902), 24 M. C. C. 343). On appeal (25 M. C. C. 280), the case was settled upon the defendants undertaking to put suitable coverings on the trucks and not to detain them under ordinary circumstances for a period exceeding two and a half hours.

In Ireland it has been held that the accumulation or deposit must have an element of permanency, and that the loading and unloading of manure in the ordinary course from a railway company's waggons for delivery to customers was not within the corresponding enactment (G. N. Rail. Co. v. Lurgan Commissioners, [1897] 2 I. R. 340); cf. also L. B. & S. C. Rail. Co. v. Haywards Heath U. D. C., p. 114, ante.

A plea of enjoyment of right for twenty years of a mixen on defendant's land contiguous to plaintiff's house, whereby during all that time offensive smells necessarily and unavoidably arose, from the said mixen, was held bad on the ground that it did not show a right to cause offensive smells on the plaintiff's premises, nor that any smells had in fact been used to pass beyond the limits of defendant's own land (Flight v. Thomas (1839), 10 A. & E. 590). See also Att.-Gen. v. Tod-Heatley, ante, p. 168; Bland v. Yates, post, p. 173. Defendants deposited on their land house refuse which caused a nuisance to adjoining occupiers by offensive smells and flies, particularly in summer and in certain states of the atmosphere and wind. The defendants' evidence was to the effect that at other times no nuisance was occasioned. JOYCE, J., granted an injunction restraining the defendants from bringing refuse on their land, so as to occasion a nuisance to the annoyance of persons in its neighbourhood, or so as to be or become injurious to the public health. He intimated that, if the defendants' evidence was correct, it was possible to bring the refuse on the land at certain times, though this must be done on their own responsibility, and that the injunction would not hinder them from doing this, so long as they did not occasion a nuisance (Att.-Gen. v. Keymer Brick Co. (1903), 67 J. P. 434; 1 L. G. R. 654).

Over-crowding in "houses," etc.

(h) This passage renders immaterial the decision in Rye Union (Guardians of) v. Payne (1875), 44 L. J. M. C. 148; 39 J. P. 375.

In a Scotch case (Home v. Local Authority of Kelso (1876), 3 Coup. 239), it was held that where a landlord let along with a farm a cottage, into which a tenant put a bailiff, and the cottage was overcrowded by the bailiff's family, the tenant and not the landlord was liable for the nuisance.

As to the overcrowding of a chapel used as a night shelter for destitute persons, see R. v. Mead, Ex parte Gates (1895), 64 L. J. M. C. 169; 59 J. P. 150. A notice directed to a person officially in charge of a night shelter that "the premises were so overcrowded as to be injurious or dangerous to the health of the inmates," and a summons and order founded upon such notice, were held to be sufficient to convey to the recipient that the nuisance complained of related to the overcrowding of a "house or part of a house," as referred to in the P. H. (London) A., 1891, s. 2 (1) (e). The temporary occupiers of such night shelters are equivalent to "inmates" of such house (R. v. Slade (1896), 65 L. J. M. C. 108; 60 J. P. 358).

"House" includes a day school, and "inmates" includes scholars (Wimbledon U. D. C. v. Hastings (1902), 67 J. P. 45; 87 L. T. 118).

As to overcrowding in tents, vans, sheds, etc., see the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 9, post, Vol. II.

(i) The words in italics were repealed by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, s. 107, and Sched. VI. See as to bakehouses, ante, pp. 34, 42.

Factories, etc.

(k) The Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 1 (2), provides that the provisions of this section (s. 91) with respect to a factory, workshop or workplace not kept in a cleanly state or not ventilated or overcrowded, shall not apply to any "factory" to which s. 1 of that Act applies. That Act contains provisions relating to the sanitary condition of factories, workshops and workplaces; but s. 2 (1) thereof provides that the provisions of the present section (s. 91), with respect to a factory, workshop or workplace not kept in a cleanly state, or not ventilated, or overcrowded, shall apply to every factory, etc. except any factory to which

s. 1 of the Act of 1901 applies. For the full text of these provisions, see App. I., post, Vol. II. Note to Section 91.

The word "workplace," as used in s. 38 (1) of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, was held to have a wider meaning than factory or workshop. A stable and stableyard, where a number of hirers of cabs attend as customers, is a "workplace," and must be provided with suitable accommodation in the way of sanitary conveniences (Bennett v. Harding, [1900] 2 Q. B. 397).

(l) As to this clause, see the second proviso to this section and notes thereto. That proviso applies only to the first limb of this clause and not to the second. See also the provision in s. 108 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, with respect to the prevention of smoke. That provision is, however, not incorporated by the present Act. Furnace not consuming smoke.

Under similar words in the P. H. (Scotland) A., 1867 (which does not, however, contain any such proviso as the second proviso to this section), it was held that a furnace could not be said not to consume its own smoke as far as practicable merely because on a few isolated dates it did not do so; the court said that the section contemplated a badly-constructed furnace, or systematic misuse of a well-constructed one (Dumfries Commissioners v. Murphy (1884), 11 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 694). In Leith JJ. v. Jas. Bertram & Son, [1915] S. C. 1133, which was decided under the P. H. (Scotland) Act, 1897, s. 16 (9), it was held that the mere absence of smoke consuming devices such as mechanical or underfeed stokers was not evidence in itself of a nuisance, and that under certain circumstances stoking by hand was more suitable than by mechanical means.

A local improvement Act enacted that every furnace used should be constructed so as to consume its own smoke, and that if any person should use a furnace not so constructed, or should use such furnace so negligently that the smoke should not be consumed, every person so offending, being the owner or occupier, or being a foreman or other person employed by such owner or occupier, should forfeit a sum of £5. W., the owner, used furnaces properly constructed, and employed a competent person to use them, but without W.'s knowledge, the servant negligently used them so that the smoke was not consumed. It was held (BLACKBURN, J., diss.) that the servant only could be convicted of the offence, and not the master (Willcocks v. Sands (1868), 32 J. P. 565).

A defendant, the owner and occupier of certain premises in the metropolis used for the purpose of manufacture, was summoned under the Smoke Nuisance (Metropolis) Act, 1853, s. 1, for negligently using a furnace in such premises so that the smoke arising therefrom was not effectually consumed. The furnace in question was constructed so as to consume its own smoke if carefully used; and the emission of smoke complained of was caused by the carelessness of the stoker. The defendant was not personally guilty of any negligence in connection with the matter. It was held that he was not criminally responsible for the negligence of his servant, and could not be convicted (Chisholm v. Doulton (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 736; 53 J. P. 550). This case, however, was distinguished in Armitage, Ltd. v. Nicholson, [1913] W. N. 116; 77 J. P. 239, where under a differently worded section in a Bradford Act employers were held liable for the negligent stoking of their men; and see also Drummond & Sons v. Nicholson (1915), 79 J. P. 525; 13 L. G. R. 958.

In consequence of the saving clause in s. 44 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121 (see now s. 334, post), it was held that smelting works were exempt from the smoke provisions of the Nuisances Removal Acts (Norris v. Barnes (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 537; 37 J. P. 246). But s. 334, post, qualifies the original saving by the words "so as to obstruct or interfere with any of such processes"; and in the case of a coal mine it has been held that such words may bring its chimney within this section. Such a chimney is privileged by s. 334, but whether it is exempt from prosecution depends on whether the smoke nuisance can be prevented reasonably without obstructing the efficient working of the mine. If it can be prevented without obstructing the efficient working of the mine, then the chimney of a coal mine is just as subject to the operation of this section as any other chimney (Patterson v. Chamber Colliery Co. (1892), 56 J. P. 200; 8 T. L. R. 278).

As to railway engines not consuming their own smoke, see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 114; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 19, passed in order to meet the omission disclosed in M., S., Railway engines.

Road locomotives.

By the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 30, every locomotive used on any highway must be constructed on the principle of consuming its own smoke; and any person using any locomotive not so constructed, or not consuming, so far as practicable, its own smoke, is liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day during which such locomotive is used on any highway. In prosecuting a person for unlawfully using a locomotive not consuming, as far as practicable, its own smoke, contrary to s. 30, the burden of proof that it does so consume its smoke lies on the defendant (Pitt-Rivers v. Glasse (1891), 55 J. P. 663; 7 T. L. R. 438). The section does not apply to light locomotives and heavy motor cars, if the weight of the car unladen does not exceed five tons or six and a half tons with an unladen vehicle drawn by it: see the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, s. 1 and Sched., the Motor Car Act, 1903, s. 12 (1), and Art. III. of the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904. The position of one of the last-mentioned vehicles was recently considered under the following circumstances:—The appellants were summoned under s. 30, for using on a highway a locomotive which did not consume so far as practicable its own smoke. The locomotive was a petrol motor-omnibus weighing less than five tons, and had a smokeless engine, but it was seen to emit considerable quantities of smoke which smelt of burnt oil. This was caused by the negligence of the driver in supplying an excessive quantity of lubricating oil to the working parts. The magistrate found, as a fact, that the omnibus was so constructed that no smoke or visible vapour could be emitted therefrom, except by reason of the driver's negligence:—Held, that as the motor-omnibus weighed less than five tons, and was so constructed that no smoke or vapour was emitted therefrom, except from a temporary cause, it was exempted by s. 1 of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, as varied by Art. III. of the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, from the operation of s. 30 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, and that, therefore, the appellants had committed no offence against the section under which they were summoned (Star Omnibus Co. (London) Ltd. v. Tagg (1907), 71 J. P. 352; 97 L. T. 481). Cf. also R. v. Wilbraham (1907), 71 J. P. 336; 96 L. T. 712; but see Hindle v. Noblett (1908), 72 J. P. 373; 99 L. T. 26.

"Chimney" emitting black smoke.

(m) The owner of a steamship on the Thames was summoned under s. 24 (b) of the London Act, for a nuisance caused by the emission of black smoke from the funnel of the steamship. It was held that the funnel was a "chimney" within the meaning of the section (Tough v. Hopkins, [1904] 1 K. B. 804; 68 J. P. 274). So, too, semble, would be the funnel of a railway engine. As to chimneys of mines, smelting works, etc., see preceding note and Patterson v. Chamber Colliery Co., there cited.

The respondents were summoned for sending forth black smoke on a certain day from a chimney of premises belonging to them (not being the chimney of a private dwelling-house) in such quantity as to be a nuisance within the meaning of the Nuisances Removal Acts (18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 12; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, s. 13; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 14). Proof was given that black smoke issued from the chimney on the day named so as to be a nuisance, and that the premises were in the occupation of the respondents, and used as a factory. No evidence was adduced to show that any inquiry had been made to find out who had charge of the furnace causing the smoke at the time of the emission. It was held that the respondents were properly summoned, as the persons by whose permission the nuisance arose, and were responsible as such, if the person causing the smoke to issue was their servant (Barnes v. Ackroyd (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 474; 37 J. P. 116).

G.'s mill sent forth black smoke for more than ten minutes. The furnace was properly constructed and superintended by efficient firemen, and the stoker's own negligence was the cause of the smoke. G. was summoned for a nuisance within the meaning of s. 91. It was held that the justices were wrong in dismissing the charge, and in holding that G. was not liable (Niven v. Greaves (1890), 54 J. P. 548).

In Barnes v. Norris (1876), L. R. 7 Q. B. 537; 41 J. P. 150, B. charged N. that black smoke issued from certain chimneys on his premises so as to cause a nuisance. There were five separate chimneys together, each used for a separate purpose. N. objected that the summons was bad for not showing from which of the chimneys the smoke was said to issue:—Held, that the justices were wrong in allowing this objection, and that they ought to have heard the evidence and made their order as to one or more of the chimneys. Semble, per CLEASBY, B., that if there were several chimneys together which sent forth smoke, though each might not of itself send forth sufficient to be a nuisance, yet an offence might be committed. See also R. v. Waterhouse, in notes to s. 98, post, p. 186.

"Private dwelling-house."

(n) As to what is a "private dwelling-house" for the purposes of this section, see Queen Anne's Mansions v. Westminster Corporation (1901), 46 Sol. J. 70. See also McNair v. Baker, [1904] 1 K. B. 208; 68 J. P. 66, where it was held that a west-end London club did not come within the exception of a private dwelling-house in s. 24 (b) of the P. H. (London) A., 1891. The club was composed of 750 members and had for many years occupied premises which had previously been a private dwelling-house. There was, however, the usual accommodation for the members, and a staff of servants resided on the premises.

(o) Smoke need not be injurious to health in order to be a nuisance within this and the following sections (Gaskell v. Bayley (1874), 38 J. P. 293; 30 L. T. 516), nor is it necessary to prove that any particular person or property is injuriously affected by it (South London Electric Supply Corporation v. Perrin, [1901] 2 K. B. 186; 65 J. P. 637).

Common law nuisances by smoke, noise, smell, or vibration.

Smoke, unaccompanied by noise or noxious vapour, noise alone, and offensive odours alone, although not injurious to health, may severally constitute a nuisance, though not one capable of being dealt with summarily under this Act. The material question in all such cases is, whether the annoyance produced is such as materially to interfere with the ordinary comfort of human existence. An injunction was granted to restrain the issuing of smoke and effluvia from a factory chimney and the making of noise in the factory, though it was situated in a manufacturing town, it being proved that such smoke, effluvia and noise were a material addition to previously existing nuisances (Crump v. Lambert (1867), L. R. 3 Eq. 409; affirmed (1867), 17 L. T. 133). See also Savile v. Kilner (1872), 26 L. T. 277 (smoke and vapour from glass works); Lambton v. Mellish, [1894] 3 Ch. 163; 58 J. As to noxious trades, see ss. 112—115, post, p. 211, and s. 51 of the P. H. A., 1907, post.

As to the liability on indictment for causing a nuisance by smoke, see R. v. White (1757), 1 Burr. 333; R. v. Dewsnap (1812), 16 East, 194, and the Steam Engine Furnaces Act, 1821 (as to costs and orders for abatement). It is to be observed, however, that a defendant cannot be punished under this Act as well as on indictment or similar proceedings. See ss. 111, 340, 341, post. As to the right of action for damage to property caused by smoke, see St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 642.

As to the liability of the owner for a smoke nuisance caused by his tenant, see Rich v. Basterfield, and the remarks thereon in Harris v. James, post, p. 178.

As to the rights of joint owners of a party wall, containing the flues of both houses, if smoke from a fireplace in one house escapes through cracks into the other house, see Jones v. Pritchard, [1908] 1 Ch. 630.

Ordinary remedy not excluded.

(p) As already stated in note (b), this section does not apply to every nuisance which may be made the subject of indictment or action. The nuisances enumerated in it, however, may be remedied by ordinary legal proceedings as well as under this Act, subject to the proviso in s. 111, post, p. 210, that no person shall be twice punished for the same offence. See also ss. 340, 341, post.

Other statutory nuisances punishable summarily.

In the case of coal mines, the Coal Mines Act, 1911, s. 26, and in the case of other mines the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Act, 1872, s. 13, contain provisions as to the fencing of abandoned shafts for the prevention of accidents. Shafts not fenced as required by those sections (which differ materially in their wording), may be dealt with as statutory nuisances under the present section (s. 91). The Quarry (Fencing) Act, 1887, contains a similar provision relating to the fencing of quarries. For these provisions, see App. I., post, Vol. II.

The Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 9, post, Vol. II., provides that a tent, van, shed, or similar structure, used for human habitation, which is in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health, or which is so overcrowded as to be injurious to the health of the inmates, whether or not members of the same family, shall be deemed to be a nuisance within the meaning of this section, and the provisions of this Act are to apply accordingly. See also Att.-Gen. v. Brown and Att.-Gen. v. Stone, ante, p. 168.

Reference may also be made to the Inclosure Act, 1857, as to nuisances on town and village greens and allotments for exercise and recreation; and to 34 & 35 Vict. c. 113, and 54 & 55 Vict. c. 76, ss. 2, 48, 49, as to nuisances in the metropolis for want of water.

Proviso as to trade "deposits."

(q) The penalty here referred to is that which may be enforced by virtue of s. 96, post, p. 182, to which it might have been more appropriate to append this proviso. Apparently the case must be brought before the court on an information, and the court are not to impose a penalty if they be satisfied as herein mentioned. If, however, the authority are assured that such will be the result, they will be justified in abstaining from fruitless proceedings. See the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, 1848, s. 14, and 1879, s. 39 (2), as to the burden of proof in respect of a proviso, etc. being on the defendant.

(r) This points to the injury outside of the premises.

Proviso as to non-consumption of smoke.

(s) There is here a material alteration of the L. G. A., 1858, s. 45, and the law is much simplified. The information must, however, be laid, and the court must be satisfied, and if so satisfied must dismiss the complaint. An information was laid against a brewer, for that black smoke was from time to time sent forth from the chimney of his brewery in such quantities as to be a nuisance, and the justices convicted. It was held, on a case stated, that the second proviso in the text applied only to the first part of sub-s. (7), and not to the second part, making it an offence to send forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance, and that the defendant was not entitled to call evidence as to the construction of the furnace (Weekes v. King (1885), 49 J. P. 709; 53 L. T. 51). An attempt was made to question this decision in Ex parte Schofield, [1891] 2 Q. B. 428; 56 J. P. 4; but the High Court held that they were bound by Weekes v. King, and the Court of Appeal held that the matter being criminal, no appeal lay from that decision.

A local Act incorporated the smoke provisions of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, but contained a similar power to that in the text of remission of the penalties. Where a magistrate found that the only mode by which the emission of smoke complained of could be diminished would render it impossible for the defendant to carry on his business with the furnace he used, which was proved to be properly constructed, the Court of Exchequer held that he had consumed his smoke as far as possible, and was entitled to a remission. These words are not to be construed absolutely, but as signifying "as far as possible, consistent with the carrying on of the trade for which the furnace is used" (Cooper v. Woolley (1867), L. R. 2 Ex. 88; 31 J. P. 135); Drummond v. Nicholson (1915), 79 J. P. 525; 13 L. G. R. 958, was a case decided under a local Act, which provided that no penalty should be inflicted on the owner or occupier where the furnaces were constructed to consume or burn the smoke arising therefrom, and the emission of smoke was due to the act or default of a stoker, engineer, or other employee. No evidence was called from the person in charge of the furnaces, but expert evidence was given to show that the emission must have been caused by an act or default of the person in charge. The justices declined to accept the expert's evidence and convicted, and this conviction was upheld. And see the cases in note (l), supra).

Duty of local authority to inspect district for detection of nuisances.

92. It shall be the duty (a) of every local authority to cause to be made from time to time inspection of their district (b), with a view to ascertain what nuisances exist calling for abatement under the powers of this Act, and to enforce the provisions of this Act in order to abate the same; also to enforce the provisions of any Act (c) in force within their district requiring fireplaces and furnaces to consume their own smoke.

Remedy in case of default.

(a) It will be observed from s. 105 that, apart from action by the local authority, it is open to any person aggrieved to take proceedings for the abatement of nuisances, and for this reason the M. of H. would probably not consider s. 299 applicable should default on the part of the authority be alleged. Under the L. G. A., 1894, s. 8 (3), a parish council has power to deal with insanitary pools, ditches, and drains, but so as not to interfere with any private right or the sewage or drainage work of any local authority. But nothing in that section is to derogate from any obligation of a district council with respect to the execution of sanitary works.

Entry upon premises.

(b) See s. 102, post, p. 188, as to how this inspection is to be effected. There is no absolute right, in the first instance, of entry into premises for the purpose of this inspection; if admission be refused an order of justices must be obtained under s. 102. Much misapprehension exists in the minds of some medical officers and inspectors of nuisances on this point. But a great deal of information can be obtained as to the state of the district without compulsory entry into premises. See Vines v. North London Collegiate Schools, Consett U. D. C. v. Crawford, and Wimbledon U. D. C. v. Hastings, cited in the notes to s. 102, post, p. 189. Cf. a similar duty to make inspection of a district under the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, s. 17 (1), post, Vol. II.

(c) That is, any local Act. The previous section requires smoke to be consumed, but some local Acts contain special provisions on the subject. See the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, s. 108, and Willcocks v. Sands and Chisholm v. Doulton, in note (l) to s. 91, ante, p. 171.

Information of nuisances to local authority.

93. Information of any nuisance under this Act in the district of any local authority may be given to such local authority by any person aggrieved thereby, or by any two inhabitant householders of such district, or by any officer of such authority, or by the relieving officer, or by any constable or officer of the police force of such district.

Note to Section 93.

The statute does not point out how notices are to be given to or served upon the authority, but generally notices should be in writing and addressed to the authority under their proper title, and served at their office upon their clerk. If the authority appoint any other officer to receive notices for them, the notice may be delivered to him. For forms of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 471.

Local authority to serve notice requiring abatement of nuisance.

94. On the receipt of any information respecting the existence of a nuisance the local authority shall (a), if satisfied of the existence of a nuisance, serve a notice (b) on the person by whose act default or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues (c), or, if such person cannot be found, on the owner (d) or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, requiring him to abate the same (e) within a time to be specified in the notice, and to execute such works and do such things as may be necessary for that purpose (f): Provided—

First. That where the nuisance arises from the want or defective construction of any structural convenience, or where there is no occupier of the premises, notice under this section shall be served on the owner (g):

Secondly. That where the person causing the nuisance cannot be found and it is clear that the nuisance does not arise or continue by the act default or sufferance of the owner or occupier of the premises, the local authority may themselves abate the same without further (h) order.

(a) This word is imperative, and imposes a duty upon the local authority.

Notices.

(b) See the forms of this notice in Sched. IV., Form A., post, and in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 472; and as to authentication and service of such notice, see ss. 266, 267, post. Observe that the notice must be given by the authority, or at least by their direction; it cannot be given by an officer on his own initiative. See St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (Vestry of) v. Holmes (1885), 50 J. P. 132, and Bowyer, Philpott and Payne, Ltd. v. Mather, [1919] 1 K. B. 419; 83 J. P. 50.

The public health committee of a metropolitan vestry (duly appointed under s. 58 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855), directed their officer to serve a nuisance notice in respect of a drain, and in case of non-compliance therewith, to issue a summons. After the issue, but before the hearing, of such summons, the vestry approved the committee's acts:—Held, a sufficient approval or ratification to support the summons (Firth v. Staines, [1897] 2 Q. B. 70; 61 J. P. 452; followed in R. v. Chapman, [1918] 2 K. B. 298; 82 J. P. 229).

A local authority exercises its discretion where a committee has considered a matter and reported and the report is adopted. See Agnew v. Manchester Corporation, and Bower v. Caistor R. D. C., p. 97, ante.

Person to be served.

(c) The owner or occupier is not to be served as such if the person by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arises can be found (Richmond Union v. Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's (1868), 32 J. P. 374; 18 L. T. 522). But it is not always easy to decide as between owner and occupier which of them should be treated as liable for the nuisance as the person by whose act, default, or sufferance it has arisen. The following cases may be referred to as indicating the principles which should be followed in deciding the question. If the owner of land erect a building which is a nuisance, or of which the occupation is likely to produce a nuisance, and let the land, he is liable to an indictment for such nuisance being continued or created during the term. He is also liable if he lets a building which requires particular care to prevent the occupation from being a nuisance, and the nuisance occur from want of such care on the part of the tenant. If a party buy a reversion during the tenancy, and the tenant afterwards, during his term, erect a nuisance, the reversioner is not liable for it; but if such reversioner re-let, allowing the nuisance to continue, he is liable for such continuance. And such purchaser is liable to be indicted for the continuance of the nuisance, if the original reversioner would have been liable, though the purchaser has had no opportunity of putting an end to the tenant's interest or abating the nuisance (R. v. Pedly (1834), 1 A. & E. 822; 3 L. J. M. C. 119. See also Todd v. Flight (1860), 9 C. B. (N.S.) 377). It would seem to follow that when an owner or reversioner would be liable to be indicted for a nuisance, and is, therefore, to be regarded as the person by whose act, default, or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues, the authority may proceed against him under this part of the section. But of course, it does not follow that the tenant may not also be a person by whose act, etc. the nuisance arises. Thus, in Russell v. Shenton (1842), 3 Q. B. 449, it was held that the occupier and not the owner was primâ facie liable for damages for a nuisance consisting of defective drains; and the principle thus laid down appears to be of general application, although the proviso in the latter part of this section might possibly apply to the case of drains defective in point of construction. See also per PARKE, B., in Chaunler v. Robinson (1849), 4 Exch., at p. 169. And it has been held that if the lessee of property proceeding by the licence of the lessor performs acts which amount to a nuisance, both of them are liable at law and in equity (White v. Jameson (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 303; 38 J. P. 694). If, however, the acts which cause a nuisance are executed by a lessee for his own benefit, and not for or by the direction of the owner, it would appear by analogy from a Canadian decision that the owner will not be liable (Kieffer v. Le Séminaire de Québec, [1903] A. C. 85; and see also Malzy v. Eichholz, [1916] 2 K. B. 308; 32 T. L. R. 506). In Broder v. Saillard (1876), 2 Ch. D. 692, it was held that the occupier of a house is liable for allowing the continuance on his premises of any artifical work which causes an injury to a neighbour, even though it has been put there before he took possession. Broder v. Saillard, supra, was followed in Reinhardt v. Mentasti (1889), 42 Ch. D. 685. And see Tarry v. Ashton (1876), 1 Q. B. D. 314; 40 J. P. 439; Silverton v. Marriott (1888), 52 J. P. 677; 59 L. T. 61. In Gandy v. Jubber (1864), 5 B. & S. 78; (1865), 29 J. P. 645; 9 B. & S. 15, the tenancy was from year to year, and the Court of Queen's Bench held that the landlord might have re-entered at the end of each year, and that he was, therefore, liable for the consequences resulting from an accident caused by a grating in front of the house having been for some years in a defective state. In the Exchequer Chamber this decision was overruled on the ground that it proceeded on a misapprehension of the peculiar relations existing between the landlord and tenant in the case of a tenancy from year to year. Such a tenancy requires something to be done between the landlord and tenant in order to determine the tenancy. The same principle applies to a weekly tenancy. See Bowen v. Anderson, [1894] 1 Q. B. 164; 58 J. P. 213, disapproving a contrary decision in Sandford v. Clarke (1888), 21 Q. B. D. 398; 52 J. P. 773. And see Winter v. Baker (1887), 3 T. L. R. 569. A dictum of LITTLEDALE, J., in R. v. Pedly, supra, to the effect that if a reversioner allows a nuisance to continue after he might have determined the tenancy he is liable, appears to be overruled by Gandy v. Jubber, supra. See also on this point, R. v. Barrett (1862), 32 L. J. M. C. 36; R. v. Stannard (1863), 33 L. J. M. C. 61; 28 J. P. 30. When the nuisance consists of the dangerous condition of the premises demised to the tenant, and the tenant is liable to repair under a covenant, the landlord is not liable in respect of the nuisance, unless he has done some act authorising the continuance of the dangerous state of the premises (Pretty v. Bickmore (1873), L. R. 8 C. P. 401; 37 J. P. 552. And see Nelson v. Liverpool Brewery Co. (1877), 2 C. P. D. 311; Cavalier v. Pope, [1906] A. C. 428; Malone v. Laskey and Another, [1907] 2 K. B. 141; Kennedy v. Bruce, [1907] S. C. 845). This rule applies even when the dangerous condition of the premises existed at the time of the demise, the lessee occupying under an obligation to repair (Gwinnell v. Eamer (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 658). A. let to B. a field for the purpose of its being worked as a lime quarry. The ordinary way of getting the limestone was by means of blasting, and A. authorised the quarrying of the stone and the erection of lime kilns in the field. A nuisance was caused to the adjoining occupier by the blasting and by the smoke from the kilns, and he brought an action against both A. and B. On demurrer by A., held that he, the landlord, was liable, although the nuisance was actually created by the act of his tenant, for the terms of the demise were an authority from him to B, to create the nuisance, which was, therefore, the necessary consequence of the mode of occupation contemplated in the demise (Harris v. James and Another (1876), 45 L. J. Q. B. 545). The court characterised the previous case of Rich v. Basterfield (1847), 4 C. B. 783, as one of excessive refinement. There A., the owner of a house with a fireplace and chimney, demised it to a tenant from week to week. The tenant lighted fires, and from the position of the chimney the emission of the smoke was a nuisance to B., the owner of the adjoining house. More than one week elapsed, during which A. did not determine the tenancy. In an action by B. against A. it was held that A. was not liable, as the tenant might by burning coke, or by abstaining from lighting fires, or in some similar way, have used the premises without creating a nuisance. The owner is, of course, liable for the existence of a nuisance consisting of or arising out of the non-repair of premises when he has taken upon himself the duty of repairing (Leslie v. Pounds (1812), 4 Taunt. 649; Payne v. Rogers (1794), 2 H. Bl. 350); or where the lessee is bound by his agreement to do the act which leads to the damage or matter of complaint (Burt v. Victoria Graving Dock Co., Ltd. (1882), 47 L. T. 378), for in this case the lessee resembles an agent of the lessor for the purpose of such act. As to the liability of a landlord for a nuisance caused on the demised premises by damage done without his knowledge by a trespasser, see Barker v. Herbert, on p. 167, ante. In Horridge v. Makinson (1915), 84 L. J. K. B. 1294, this case was distinguished. In that case an accident happened by the plaintiff putting her foot into a hole over a coal shoot, and she thereby sustained injuries. In making up the street the highway authority had left this hole over the shoot because of a difference in levels and to allow of the use of the shoot. It was held that the action failed, inasmuch as, where a nuisance is created by a highway authority on a highway under their control, the owner or occupier of the land adjoining the highway is not liable for an accident caused by the nuisance.

Note to Section 94.

Note to Section 94.

It is submitted that in general the occupier, and not the owner, is the person by whose act, default, or sufferance a nuisance consisting of overcrowding arises; and it has been so decided in Scotland. See Home v. Kelso Local Authority (1876), 3 Coup. 239. And see R. v. Mead, Ex parte Gates, infra.

The foregoing remarks apply only with reference to the question, who is the person to whom notice should or may be given? They do not affect any question of liability as between landlord and tenant; as to which see s. 104, post, p. 189.

Where sheep were penned in pens fixed on a highway by the owner of a market who received tolls in respect thereof, it was held that the droppings left on the site constituted a recurring nuisance which arose from his default, permission, or sufferance, for which he was liable (Draper v. Sperring (1861), 25 J. P. 566; 10 C. B. (N.S.) 113).

But a lord of a manor was held not to be liable in respect of a filthy pond on a manorial common which was managed and regulated by conservators appointed by the copyhold jury and tenants (with the assent of the lord) at the court baron (Richmond Union v. Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's (1868), 32 J. P. 374; 18 L. T. 522).

A harbour company were held to be the person through whose default a nuisance from accumulation of seaweed in the harbour arose or continued (Margate Pier and Harbour Proprietors v. Margate Town Council (1869), 33 J. P. 437; 20 L. T. 564).

Where a chapel was used as a shelter for destitute persons and orders as to the number of persons to be admitted were given by the superintendent of the philanthropic work of the religious association owning the chapel to the caretaker, apparently on his own responsibility:—Held, that the superintendent was the person by whose act, default, or sufferance a nuisance consisting in the overcrowding of the chapel at night arose (R. v. Mead, Ex parte Gates (1895), 64 L. J. M. C. 169; 59 J. P. 150).

B. drained his premises into a barrel drain, which also received the sewage of other premises. This drain passed for about 300 yards under a turnpike road, and thence the sewage was conveyed by an open drain through certain land not belonging to B. and ultimately into an open drain about half a mile from B.'s premises, by the side of a road on land not B.'s. This open drain was a nuisance, the matter from B.'s premises in itself being sufficient to cause a nuisance. On complaint, the justices ordered B. to abate the nuisance by cutting off all communication from his premises to the barrel drain. F. was the owner of six houses let to tenants. He had constructed a drain from the houses under land not his own by leave of the owner, by which the sewage was conveyed into and along a watercourse, and the accumulation at the mouth of the drain was a nuisance. On complaint, the justices ordered F. to abate the nuisance:—Held, that the orders were rightly made on B. and F., for that they were the persons by whose acts respectively the nuisances arose. In proceedings under the Act, the question whether or not the persons against whom the proceedings are taken have a legal right to cause their sewage to flow in the given channel, etc. is immaterial (Brown v. Bussell; Francombe v. Freeman (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 251; 32 J. P. 196). See, however, the observations of MATHEW, J., on Brown v. Bussell in Fordom v. Parsons, ante, p. 51, and see Kirkheaton L. B. v. Beaumont, and Kinson Pottery Co. v. Poole Corporation, ante, p. 30.

Brown v. Bussell, supra, was followed in Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, [1905] 2 K. B. 34; 69 J. P. 242. P. had for some years discharged the sewage from his house into a pipe running alongside a country road. After passing along this pipe for some 260 feet the sewage was discharged into a catchpit, and continued from such catchpit for seventy feet under a highway under the control of a rural district council to a point where it was joined by a drain from another house, and subsequently after passing through private property, emptied into a stream. The catchpit and pipe therefrom up to the point of junction with the second drain were made by the tenant of other property to prevent surface water from the highway overflowing thereon. The pipe up to the point where it was joined by the second drain carried sewage from P.'s premises only, but from the catchpit onwards it carried off also the surface water from the highway. The authority had never repaired the pipe or treated it as a sewer. The portion of pipe leading from the catchpit had been broken where it passed under the highway at a distance of six feet from the catchpit, and the sewage collected and caused a nuisance. On proceedings against P. as "the person by whose act, default or sufferance the nuisance arose," it was held that it was no defence upon proceedings under s. 94 to show that the pipe was a sewer which the authority were liable to repair. See the observations on this decision at p. 151, supra.

Where there was a flow of sewage from several houses without appreciable damage from any one house, but the accumulation caused a nuisance on other properties, the occupiers of each of the houses were held to be liable (Hendon Union v. Bowles (1869), 34 J. P. 19; 20 L. T. 609). This decision appears to answer a query left undecided in Brown v. Bussell, supra. And see Lambton v. Mellish, [1894] 3 Ch. 163; 58 J. P. 835.

The plaintiff and the defendants occupied adjoining houses, and the defendants had the right of sending sewage from their house through a pipe under the plaintiff's house into the main sewer. Twelve feet of this pipe was used solely to convey sewage from the defendants' premises. Proceedings under ss. 4 and 5 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, were taken against the plaintiff for a nuisance arising from the pipe being defective and a magistrates' order was obtained. The plaintiff thereupon did the required repairs to the pipe, including the said portion of twelve feet, and brought an action in the county court to recover contribution under s. 120 (3) of that Act, which provides that when some only of the persons by whose act or default, etc. have been proceeded against, they shall, without prejudice to any other remedy, be entitled to recover in a summary manner from the other persons who were not proceeded against a proportionate part of the costs of and incidental to such proceedings, and abating such nuisance, and of any fines, etc. The county court judge found that there was no evidence to show that the defendants were liable to repair or make good the drain; and he therefore held that the nuisance was not caused by any act or default of the defendants, and gave judgment for them. It was held, on appeal, that, as there was no evidence of any obligation on the defendants to repair any portion of the pipe on the premises occupied by the plaintiff, the decision was right (Nathan v. Rouse, [1905] 1 K. B. 527; 69 J. P. 135. See also Reeve v. Sadler on p. 205, post).

The appellant's landlord made a sewer under land let by him to the appellant without obtaining his consent. Pecuniary compensation was claimed at the time, but for two years the sewage of several houses passed through the sewer. At length the appellant, being unable to get satisfaction, stopped up the sewer, and the local board obtained a conviction against him under the above section, and s. 96, post, p. 182, although no nuisance existed on his land:—Held, that the appellant was a person by whose act the nuisance arose or continued, and that he was rightly convicted (Riddell v. Spear (1879), 43 J. P. 317; 40 L. T. 130).

The drainage from a gaol in the township of W., which is outside the borough of L., built there by the corporation of L., and duly declared to be the common gaol of the borough, was carried thence by open drains over land in the township of B. not belonging to the corporation, and caused a nuisance in B. The corporation of L. was thereupon summoned by the nuisance removal committee of B. under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121. It was held that the corporation of L. and not the justices having the management of the gaol were the proper persons to be summoned, and they were ordered to do what was necessary under that Act (Ex parte Mayor, etc. of Liverpool (1857), 27 L. J. M. C. 89; 22 J. P. 562).

When a nuisance is caused by sewage works belonging to a local authority, the authority cannot be proceeded against under this part of the Act as the person by whose act, etc. the nuisance arises (R. v. Parlby (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 520; 53 J. P. 327).

In cases of defective drains a question often arises whether the drain complained of is a drain or a sewer as defined by s. 4. In the latter case the liability is not on the person on whose premises the defect is. See the notes to s. 4, ante, pp. 24, 26, and s. 23, ante, p. 83. See also Fordom or Wycombe Union v. Parsons, [1894] 2 Q. B. 780; 58 J. P. 765, the facts of which are set out, ante, p. 51. Cf., however, Wincanton R. D. C. v. Parsons, ibid. Where, however, a drain has become a sewer by reason of its receiving the drainage of more than one house, yet, as between the local authority and the builder, who on the passing of his plans undertook that the drain should, for all purposes of the Public Health Acts, be a private drain, and that it and a cesspool into which the drainage flowed should be cleansed and maintained by him, the builder will still be the person by whose act or default the nuisance arises if a nuisance exists at the cesspool from the overflowing therefrom of sewage, although third parties might have a right to say that as between them and the authority the drain had vested in the authority as a sewer, and that the authority were liable to abate the nuisance (per CHANNELL, J., in Butt v. Snow (1903), 67 J. P. 454; 89 L. T. 302).

An authority which has taken upon itself under s. 42, ante, p. 107, the cleansing of privies belonging to cottage property, but has, after notification of an outbreak of typhoid fever, failed to eradicate fever germs which have penetrated crevices in the brickwork and cause a nuisance, cannot under s. 94 call upon an owner of the property to abate the nuisance by abolishing privies and substituting water-closets (Barnett v. Laskey (1898), 68 L. J. Q. B. 55; 63 J. P. 5).

An important sewer belonging to the defendants passed along a lane near a pond; an overflow pipe for storm water communicated with a watercourse which fed the plaintiff's pond and conveyed sewage from the sewer to the watercourse, thus polluting the pond. The plaintiff recovered damages (Smith and Taylor v. King's Norton R. D. C. (1896), 60 J. P. 521).

Serving owner or occupier.

(d) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. A mere rent collector is within that definition, and may be served with notice to abate a nuisance, although arising from structural defects (Broadbent v. Shepherd (1900), 65 J. P. 70; 83 L. T. 504). And an order may be made upon him under s. 96, post p. 182, although he has resigned his post since service of the notice to abate (Broadbent v. Shepherd (No. 2), [1901] 2 K. B. 274; 65 J. P. 499). Note that it is only when the person by whose act, etc. the nuisance arises cannot be found, that the notice may be served on the owner or occupier as such. The authority may serve either, subject to the provisoes in the latter part of this section. Where the person causing the nuisance cannot be found, the liability of the owner of premises to abate it only arises where it is shown that it continues by his act, default, or sufferance (Thames (Conservators of the River) v. London (Port Sanitary Authority of), [1894] 1 Q. B. 647; 58 J. P. 335). See Rhymney Iron Co. v. Gelligaer U. D. C. (1917), 1 K. B. 589; 81 J. P. 86, as to the words "cannot be found."

Note to Section 94.

A notice directed to a person officially in charge of a night shelter that "the premises were so overcrowded as to be injurious or dangerous to the health of the inmates," and a summons and order founded upon such notice, are sufficient to convey to the recipient that the nuisance complained of related to the overcrowding of a "house" or "part of a house," as referred to in the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 2 (1) (e). The temporary occupiers of such night shelters are equivalent to "inmates" of such house (R. v. Slade (1896), 65 L. J. M. C. 108; 60 J. P. 358).

In determining upon whom the notice should be served, the authority may have to consider whether it is in the power of the person served to comply with it. Where a nuisance existed on the land of A. which had been caused by B., and B. had no power to enter on A.'s land to abate the nuisance, it was held that he could not be ordered to do so (Scarborough (Mayor of) v. Scarborough R. S. A. (1876), 1 Ex. D. 344; 40 J. P. 726). This case was followed in R. v. Trimble (1877), 41 J. P. 455; 36 L. T. 508, where it was suggested by COCKBURN, C.J., that the order should be made on the owner of the premises where the nuisance exists. But the authority of these cases is seriously shaken by Parker v. Inge (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 584; 51 J. P. 20. In that case an authority served on the owner of premises a notice under this section requiring him to abate a nuisance arising from the defective construction of a structural convenience, and for that purpose to execute certain specified works. Having failed to comply with the notice, the owner was summoned under s. 95, and on the hearing it was proved that the premises in question were occupied by a tenant under a lease for twenty-one years, containing the usual covenants:—Held, that the owner, even although he could not enter upon the premises and execute the works without the tenant's permission, had made default in complying with the requisitions of the notice within the meaning of s. 95, and, therefore, that the justices had jurisdiction to make an order under s. 96, requiring him to abate the nuisance. See also Broadbent v. Shepherd (No. 2), ante, p. 180. The decision in Scarborough (Mayor of) v. Scarborough R. S. A., supra, has, however, been followed in an Irish case (Letterkenny Commissioners v. Collins (1891), 28 L. R. Ir. 235). Cf. also Arlidge v. Islington Borough Council, on p. 164, ante, and Meyrick v. Pembroke Corporation, p. 85, ante.

"Abatement"

(e) The abatement of a nuisance may possibly involve the pulling down of the premises where the nuisance consists of overcrowding, and the premises are unfit for human habitation. See Brown v. Biggleswade, cited at 43 J. P. 554.

Contents of notice.

(f) A notice requiring the abatement of the nuisance forthwith after service thereof, sufficiently specifies the time within which the nuisance must be abated (Thomas v. Western Steam Trawling Co. (1894), 59 J. P. 232). See also Thomas v Nokes (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 521.

The authority must, in general, specify in the notice the works which they require to be done. See R. v. Wheatley (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 34; 50 J. P. 424; R. v. Horrocks (1900), 64 J. P. 661; 82 L. T. 767; Whatling v. Rees (1915), 79 J. P. 209; and cases cited in notes to s. 96, post, p. 182. But a notice to abate a nuisance caused by quantities of black smoke issuing from a factory chimney need not necessarily specify the works required to be done in order to abate the nuisance (Millard v. Wastall, [1898] 1 Q B. 342; 62 J. P. 135). See also Central London Rail. Co. v. Hammersmith Borough Council (1904), 73 L. J. K. B. 623; 68 J. P. 217; Tough v. Hopkins, [1904] 1 K. B. 804; 68 J. P. 271, cited in the notes to s. 96.

Liability for structural defects.

(g) See Cook v. Montague, ante, p. 8. The owner as distinguished from the occupier is in all cases to abate a nuisance which arises from structural deficiencies or defective construction. The occupier is not liable under the Act for such defects, whatever may be his contractual responsibilities with his landlord. Such responsibilities are not affected by the Act. See s. 104, post, p. 189.

Where notice was served on an occupier, and in the course of the work to abate the nuisance it was found that it was caused by a structural defect, it was held that the occupier could recover the expenses from the owner (Gebhardt v. Saunders, [1892] 2 Q. B. 452; 56 J. P. 741).

Note to Section 94.

(h) This word should have been omitted. In the cases contemplated there has not been any order.

On non-compliance with notice, complaint to be made to justice.

95. If the person on whom a notice to abate a nuisance has been served makes default in complying with any of the requisitions thereof within the time specified, or if the nuisance although abated since the service of the notice is, in the opinion of the local authority, likely to recur (a) on the same premises, the local authority shall (b) cause a complaint (c) relating to such nuisance to be made before a justice (d), and such notice shall thereupon issue a summons (e) requiring the person on whom the notice was served to appear before a court of summary jurisdiction (f).

(a) See Draper v. Sperring, ante, p. 178. See also note (a) to the next section.

(b) These words are imperative, and the neglect of the local authority will be a default; as to which see s. 299, post.

(c) It does not appear that this complaint must be in writing. See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 8. But it will be safer for it to be in writing, so as to prevent any dispute in the future by the person in alleged default as to the particular matter complained of. As to the limitation of time, see s. 252, post. The time will, of course, in the first place run from the default to which the section applies; but it is not so clear when the matter of complaint arises in the second.

A complaint under this section cannot be made the basis of an action for malicious prosecution against the officer who laid it and the council who directed him to do so (Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford U. D. C., [1915] 1 K. B. 600; 79 J. P. 145).

(d) See as to his competency, s. 258, and the notes thereon (post).

(e) See the form of the summons in Sched. IV., Form B. Justices may, in the exercise of their discretion, refuse to issue a summons, even if there be evidence of the offence before them, if they consider that the issue of a summons would be a vexatious and improper proceeding (R. v. Bros (1901), 66 J. P. 54).

(f) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

Power of court of summary jurisdiction to make order dealing with nuisance.

96. If the court is satisfied that the alleged nuisance exists, or that although abated it is likely to recur (a) on the same premises, the court shall (b) make an order on such person requiring him to comply with all or any of the requisitions of the notice, or otherwise to abate the nuisance within a time specified in the order, and to do any works necessary for that purpose (c); or an order prohibiting the recurrence of the nuisance and directing the execution of any works necessary to prevent the recurrence (d); or an order both requiring abatement and prohibiting the recurrence of the nuisance.

The court may by their order impose a penalty not exceeding five pounds on the person on whom the order is made (e), and shall also give directions (f) as to the payment of all costs incurred up to the time of the hearing or making the order for abatement or prohibition of the nuisance.

(a) Upon the summons mentioned in the last section, the court may make an order as provided in this section. In Barnes v. Akroyd, ante, p. 172, BLACKBURN, J., said that the justices had stopped too soon in their investigations, for after first ascertaining whether a nuisance had been proved to exist, they should have proceeded further to inquire if such nuisance were likely to recur.

(b) This is imperative; still if the defendant undertake to abate the nuisance, it is presumed that the court may adjourn the case to observe the result of the undertaking.

As to the appearance of the local authority in court, see s. 259, post.

Note to Section 96.

(c) The form of order is given in Sched. IV., Form C., post. It was held that it must be signed by two justices (Wing v. Epsom U. D. C., [1904] 1 K. B. 798; 68 J. P. 259), but since the date of this decision the Lord Chancellor has prescribed forms of convictions and orders under the powers conferred by the Criminal Justice Ad. Act, 1914, and by rule 53 of the S. J. Rules, 1915, it is provided that in every case of an order made by justices it shall be sufficient if it is signed and sealed by one justice. In R. v. Down JJ., [1905] 2 I. R. 648, it was held that when justices make an order for the abatement of a nuisance, under s. 112 of the P. H. (Ireland) A., 1878, the order of the justices is not the entry in the order book, but the document drawn up in accordance with Form C. in Sched. (C.) of the Act, and that if the order so drawn up is good in form, its validity is not affected by the fact that the entry in the order book would be bad on its face as an order. The point was also raised, but not decided, whether, when such an order is made by more than two justices, all must sign it or whether signature by two justices is sufficient. In R. v. Londonderry JJ., [1910] 2 I. R. 458, three out of five justices decided to make an abatement order. An order, drawn up several days later, was signed by one member of the majority and one member of the minority. Upon a rule being obtained to quash it, the other two members of the majority signed it:—Held (1) that the order required signature by a majority of the adjudicating justices, but (2) that the omission did not go to jurisdiction, and could be corrected afterwards, and (3) that the delay in signing and completing the order did not warrant the issue of a certiorari.

Form and contents of order.

In Ex parte Whitchurch (1881), 6 Q. B. D. 545; 45 J. P. 392, a privy and ashpit being a nuisance, notice was given to abate it and for that purpose to fill up the ashpit, abandon the privy, and build a pail closet. On default justices made an order under this section in the terms of the notice. The court quashed the order on the ground that the owner could not be compelled to put up a particular kind of closet. STEPHEN, J., said that the question turned upon the word necessary, which could not be extended to mean what the authority thought necessary. But in Ex parte Saunders (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 191; 47 J. P. 404, a water-closet in the centre of a house being a nuisance, the authority gave notice to the owner to abate the nuisance, and for that purpose to remove the closet from the centre of the house, and place it near an outer wall, where there might be efficient ventilation, and to fix the soil-pipe outside the wall. The owner having made default, an order was made under this section to do the things specified. It was held that the justices had jurisdiction to make the order. The court (CAVE and A. L. SMITH, JJ.) intimated that Ex parte Whitchurch was distinguishable, on the ground that the order was not for the erection of a particular kind of closet where none existed before, but for the removal of a closet to a place where it would not be a nuisance. In R. v. Llewellyn (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 681; 49 J. P. 151, a privy openly discharged night soil and offensive matter on the bank of a river. The sanitary authority served on the owner of the premises notice to abate the nuisance, and for that purpose to "remove the present pipes and pan, level the floor under the seat of the privy, and provide a galvanised double-handled pail under the seat, the cover of the said seat to be movable, so that the said premises should no longer be a nuisance or injurious to health." The justices made an order in the terms of the notice, and it was held they had jurisdiction to do so. The court adopted the decision in Ex parte Saunders, saying that if it differed from Ex parte Whitchurch they differed also. After this decision it was clear that the cases were in conflict; and accordingly when the point again arose it was ordered to be argued before three judges. It appeared that an order had been made requiring the appellant, inter alia, to lay down a six-inch glazed stoneware drain pipe, and to connect it with the main sewer in front of his house. FIELD MANISTY and WILLS, JJ., held that there was jurisdiction to make the order, and overruled Ex parte Whitchurch (R. v. Kent JJ. (1885), 55 L. J. M. C. 9; 49 J. P. 404). In Whitaker v. Derby Urban Sanitary Authority (1885), 55 L. J. M. C. 8; 50 J. P. 357, the respondents served on the owner of houses to which were attached privies and ashpits, which were a nuisance, a notice requiring him to abate the nuisance, and "for that purpose to deodorise and fill in the privies, privy vaults and ashpits, convert the same to proper pan water-closets, and connect them with the main sewer." This notice was not complied with, and an order was thereupon made by justices in the terms of the notice. It was held that the order was good, as the above section left it absolutely Specification of works required.

Note to Section 96.

to the justices to order any works or structural alterations which they in their discretion might think necessary for the abatement of the nuisance. In R. v. Wheatley (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 34; 50 J. P. 424, an order of justices requiring the owner of premises to abate a nuisance arising from untrapped drains, and "to execute such works and do such things as may be necessary for that purpose, so that the same shall no longer be a nuisance or injurious to health," was held bad, because it did not specify what works and things the owner should execute and do for the purpose of abating the nuisance. This case was followed in R. v. Meath JJ. (1899), 34 Ir. L. T. 47. An order of justices "to take such steps as may be necessary to abate a nuisance arising from an accumulation of slaughter-house offal and filth in fields, so that the same shall no longer be a nuisance or injurious to health," was held bad as to the part which dealt with the abatement of the nuisance, as it did not specify the work necessary, but good as to the part which prohibited the recurrence of the nuisance, as in preventing such recurrence there was no necessity to do any work at all (R. v. Horrocks (1900), 69 L. J. Q. B. 688; 64 J. P. 661). In Whatling v. Rees (1915), 79 J. P. 209; 13 L. G. R. 274, the flooding of a cellar arising from a spring caused a nuisance, and a notice to abate the same by draining off the water and filling in the cellar, etc., was held bad in law; it being ambiguous as it might mean either that the appellant was to drain off the water which was then in the cellar or that he was to drain off the water effectively so as to prevent it coming in again. A notice to abate a nuisance caused by quantities of black smoke issuing from a factory chimney need not necessarily specify the works required to be done in order to abate the nuisance (Millard v. Wastall, [1898] 1 Q. B. 342; 62 J. P. 135). This case was followed in a case under the P. H. (London) A., 1891 (Central London Rail. Co. v. Hammersmith Borough Council (1904), 73 L. J. K. B. 623; 68 J. P. 217). Under s. 5 (5) of the London Act it is provided that "an abatement order or prohibition order shall, if the person on whom the order is made so requires, or the court considers it desirable, specify the works to be executed by such person for the purpose of abating or preventing the recurrence of the nuisance," but notwithstanding this provision and that a request to specify works has been made, it has been held that it is not necessary for the justices to specify the works in an abatement or prohibition order when the nuisance complained of is one arising from black smoke, if there is no necessity for works in order to prevent the nuisance, e.g., if the only remedy be proper stoking (Central London Rail. Co. v. Hammersmith Borough Council, supra; Tough v. Hopkins, [1904] 1 K. B. 804; 68 J. P. 274).

Severability of order.

(d) An order may be good as to the prohibition, though bad as to the abatement. See Scarborough (Mayor of) v. Scarborough R. S. A., ante, p. 181; R. v. Horrocks, supra.

Appeal.

An order made under this section is an order made in a criminal cause or matter within the meaning of the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 47, and when the King's Bench Division has granted a certiorari to quash the order, an appeal will not lie to the Court of Appeal (R. v. Whitchurch (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 534; 45 J. P. 617). In another case, upon a complaint as to a factory chimney sending forth black smoke, so as to be a nuisance within s. 91 (7), the magistrate convicted, and refused to state a case. The High Court, having refused to grant a rule to the magistrate to state a case, it was held that the proceedings were criminal, and that no appeal lay to the Court of Appeal (Ex parte Schofield, [1891] 2 Q. B. 428; 56 J. P. 4), and see R. v. D'Eyncourt (1901), 18 T. L. R. 53).

An order of justices under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 13, was without appeal to the quarter sessions (Ex parte Corporation of Liverpool (1857), 22 J. P. 562; 8 El. & Bl. 537); but now s. 269, post, allows of an appeal to sessions, and s. 99, post, p. 187, suspends proceedings in that event. For a case where the right to appeal was lost by part acceptance of the notice and part performance of the works required therein during repeated adjournments of the hearing, see R. (Sherburn) v. Cork JJ. (1908), I. L. T. 247.

A court of summary jurisdiction made an order under this section, upon an owner of premises to comply with a notice served upon him by the authority requiring him to abate a nuisance. Quarter sessions dismissed an appeal against the order, but stated a case. The High Court ordered that the order of quarter sessions should be quashed, and instead thereof judgment entered for the owner, and that the authority should pay to the owner the costs of the two appeals. These costs were taxed, and paid to the owner by the authority. The expenses incurred by the owner in prosecuting the appeals exceeded the costs so paid to him. All the expenses incurred by the owner throughout the proceedings were reasonably and properly incurred:—Held, that the owner's expenses of the proceedings in the court of summary jurisdiction, and the difference between his costs taxed as between party and party and his actual expenses of the two appeals, were not damage for which he was entitled to compensation under s. 308, post (Barnett v. Eccles (Mayor, etc. of), [1900] 2 Q. B. 423; 64 J. P. 692). Note to Section 96.

(e) It is to be noticed that the form in the schedule does not provide for this penalty. The provision is new, and the imposition of the penalty is discretionary. Penalty discretionary.

It is not quite clear whether this penalty is for the previous nuisance, or for disobedience of the notice of the authority. It cannot be for disobedience of the justices' order, for that was not then made. It seems, however, if the two sections, 95 and 96, be read together, that the penalty is for non-compliance with the notice, inasmuch as complaint cannot be made to the justices until the person served with notice is in default.

Appellants, acting under the corresponding section (s. 4) of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, gave notice to the respondent in March, 1904, forthwith to abate, and within the like period to prevent the recurrence of, a nuisance consisting of black smoke issuing from the chimney of a bakehouse. No further nuisance was observed till January, 1906, when the chimney was seen to send forth black smoke in such a quantity as to be a nuisance. The appellants thereupon summoned the respondent for making default in complying with the notice of March, 1904. The magistrate found upon the evidence that immediately on receipt of the notice the nuisance was abated, and that the matter now complained of was a separate and independent occurrence, and he dismissed the summons:—Held, that it was open to the magistrate to find that the two occurrences were not connected with one another, and that his decision must stand (Battersea Borough Council v. Goerg (1906), 71 J. P. 11; 5 L. G. R. 62). For a similar decision where the interval was six months, see Greenwich Borough Council v. London C. C. (1912), 76 J. P. 267; 106 L. T. 887.

No penalty can be imposed in cases coming within the first proviso to s. 91, ante, p. 165.

(f) It is presumed that this must be by an order, but the form in the schedule does not provide for these costs. It has been held in Ireland under similar sections that the justices must determine the amount of costs "reasonably" incurred, and have no discretion to award a less sum (Mullingar R. D. C. v. Greville (1906), 41 Ir. L. T. 144). Costs.

97. Where the nuisance proved to exist is such as to render a house or building, in the judgment of the court, unfit for human habitation, the court may prohibit the using thereof for that purpose until, in its judgment, the house or building is rendered fit for that purpose; and on the court (a) being satisfied that it has been rendered fit (b) for that purpose the court may determine its previous order by another, declaring the house or building habitable, and from the date thereof such house or building may be let or inhabited. Order of prohibition in case of house unfit for human habitation.

(a) By the use of this word the difficulty in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 13, is avoided. It is not now necessary that the same justices should act. The statute does not indicate any mode of procedure. Presumably an application is to be made to the court, and previous notice should be sent to the authority.

(b) See the provisions in s. 157, post, p. 327, as to byelaws regarding houses unfit for human habitation. Such byelaws are restricted to houses erected within the period specified, but this section applies to ancient as well as modern houses.

See also the provisions of the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, ss. 17—21, post, Vol. II., as to the closing and demolition of premises which are in a state so dangerous or injurious to health as to be unfit for human habitation.

Section 98.

Penalty for contravention of order of court.

98. Any person not obeying an order to comply with the requisitions of the local authority or otherwise to abate the nuisance, shall, if he fails to satisfy the court that he has used all due diligence to carry out such order, be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten shillings per day during his default (a); and any person knowingly and wilfully acting contrary to an order of prohibition shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings per day during such contrary action; moreover, the local authority may (b) enter the premises to which any order relates, and abate the nuisance, and do whatever may be necessary in execution of such order, and recover in a summary manner (c) the expenses incurred by them from the person on whom the order is made.

Offences against abatement and prohibition orders.

(a) Upon an information against H. for a nuisance arising through a chimney sending forth black smoke, an order was made on July 20th, 1868, that within two months he should make such alterations in the said chimney as to consume the smoke arising therefrom. He thereupon made certain alterations, and black smoke ceased to issue until the 4th of the following February, when for a certain limited period on that day and the following days it again issued. In the following July an information was laid for disobedience of the order. No evidence was given as to the cause of the issuing of the smoke, and the justices convicted H.:—Held, first, that there was evidence justifying the conviction; and, secondly, that as the nuisance was a continuing one, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 11, did not apply (Higgins v. Northwich Union (1870), 34 J. P. 806; 22 L. T. 752; see, however, Battersea Borough Council v. Goerg, and Greenwich Borough Council v. London C. C., ante, p. 185). But s. 11 applies to this extent, viz.: penalties in respect of a continuing offence cannot be imposed for a greater period than six months prior to the issue of the summons for the recovery thereof (R. v. Slade, [1895] 2 Q. B. 247; 59 J. P. 471). A conviction which inflicts future daily penalties is bad; but that part of a conviction can be separated from the rest of the conviction (Mayor, etc. of Scarborough v. Scarborough R. S. A. (1876), 1 Ex. D. 344; 40 J. P. 726; Chepstow Electric Light, etc. Co. v. Chepstow Gas, etc. Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 198; 69 J. P. 72).

When an abatement order was persistently disregarded, nineteen separate informations were laid, and the same number of summonses issued in respect of as many acts of disobedience, each committed on a different day, by sending forth black smoke. At the hearing, the full penalty of 10*s.* was imposed for the offence alleged in each summons, and the offenders were also ordered to pay 15*s.* costs on the first summons, and 16*s.* costs upon every other They objected that their disobedience was but one default, and that the divers acts complained of should have been charged in a single summons, to which only one set of costs would have attached; and they obtained a rule calling on the justices to state a case:—Held, that each daily emission of smoke was a separate act of disobedience, for which a separate summons might be lawfully issued, and that under the circumstances the justices had not so exercised their discretion in awarding costs as to render the interference of the court necessary (R. v. Waterhouse (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 545; 36 J. P. 471).

Black smoke having issued from a chimney in such quantities as to be a nuisance, an abatement order was made. Subsequently, black smoke having again issued from the chimney, an order was made prohibiting the recurrence of the nuisance. Two informations having been laid, one in respect of each order, but both founded on the same emission of smoke:—Held, that the act complained of being the same in each case, there could not be two convictions in respect of it (Eddleston v. Barnes (1875), 1 Ex. D. 67; 40 J. P. 88).

A summons must be issued to the defendant before this penalty can be enforced (R. v. Jenkins (1862), 26 J. P. 775; 3 B. & S. 116).

It would seem from Parker v. Inge, ante, p. 181, that an owner ordered to abate a nuisance would not be liable to a penalty if he proved that he had no power to enter upon the lands where the nuisance was, and had been refused admission. As to whether under such circumstances the order should be made upon him at all, see also the other decisions there cited. Note to Section 98.

Justices made an order on P. to cleanse a drain; P. did not obey the order and the local board refused to take any steps to enforce it:—Held, that the party aggrieved was not entitled to a mandamus to the local board to compel them to abate the nuisance under the corresponding provisions of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, s. 14 (Ex parte Bassett; In re West Ham L. B. (1857), 21 J. P. 85; 7 El. & Bl. 280). This case was decided, however, before the passing of the Sanitary Act, 1866, s. 49 of which appears in this Act as s. 299, and provides for default by a sanitary authority in enforcing the provisions of this Act. And see also the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 7, post, Vol. II., which provides that it shall be the duty of every local authority to put in force from time to time, as occasion may arise, the powers with which they are invested, so as to procure the proper sanitary condition of all premises within the area under their control. Default of local authority to enforce order.

(b) Although this clause gives a right of entry upon default, yet, if admission be refused, a justices' order under s. 102, p. 188, post, will apparently be necessary. When an order was made under the corresponding provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, upon an owner to abate a nuisance, and, in his default, upon the local authority, he was held liable to the penalty for default, though the authority failed to act under the order (Tomlins v. Nuisance Removal Company of Great Stanmore (1865), 29 J. P. 117; 12 L. T. 118). Right of entry.

99. Where any person appeals against an order to the court of quarter sessions in manner provided by this Act (a) no liability to penalty shall arise, nor shall any proceedings be taken or work be done under such order, until after the determination of such appeal, unless such appeal ceases to be prosecuted (b). Appeal against order.

(a) See s. 269, post.

(b) It may be difficult in some cases to decide when this time has arrived.

100. Whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the court of summary jurisdiction that the person by whose act or default the nuisance arises, or the owner or occupier of the premises is not known or cannot be found, then the order of the court may be addressed to and executed by the local authority. In certain cases order may be addressed to local authority.

See the form of the order in Sched. IV., Form D., post.

The proviso at the end of s. 94, ante, p. 176, applies only where the person causing the nuisance cannot be found, and it is clear that the owner and occupier are not responsible. In that case no order is necessary. But when neither the person causing the nuisance, nor the owner nor the occupier can be found, then an order may be made on the authority under this section.

101. Any matter or thing removed by the local authority in abating any nuisance under this Act may be sold by public auction; and the money arising from the sale may be retained by the local authority, and applied in payment of the expenses incurred by them with reference to such nuisance, and the surplus (if any) shall be paid, on demand, to the owner of such matter or thing. Power to sell manure, etc.

See also s. 49, ante, p. 117, where, however, a sale by public auction is not required. Sale by auction can hardly be necessary in most of these cases. It is to be noticed that this section applies only to matters or things removed by the local authority in abating a nuisance.

Section 102.

Power of entry of local authority.

102. The local authority, or any of their officers, shall (a) be admitted into any premises (b) for the purpose of examining as to the existence of any nuisance thereon (c), or of enforcing the provisions of any Act (d) in force within the district requiring fireplaces and furnaces to consume their own smoke, at any time between the hours of nine in the forenoon and six in the afternoon, or in the case of a nuisance arising in respect of any business, then at any hour when such business is in progress or is usually carried on.

Where under this Act a nuisance has been ascertained to exist or an order of abatement or prohibition has been made (e), the local authority or any of their officers shall (f) be admitted from time to time into the premises between the hours aforesaid, until the nuisance is abated, or the works ordered to be done are completed, as the case may be.

Where an order of abatement or prohibition has not been complied with, or has been infringed, the local authority, or any of their officers, shall (f) be admitted from time to time at all reasonable hours, or at all hours during which business is in progress or is usually carried on, into the premises where the nuisance exists, in order to abate the same (g).

If admission to premises for any of the purposes of this section is refused, any justice on complaint thereof on oath (h) by any officer of the local authority (made after reasonable notice in writing of the intention to make the same has been given (i) to the person having custody of the premises) may, by order under his hand, require the person having custody of the premises to admit the local authority, or their officer, into the premises during the hours aforesaid, and if no person having custody of the premises can be found, the justice shall, on oath (h) made before him of that fact, by order under his hand authorise the local authority or any of their officers to enter such premises during the hours aforesaid.

Any order made by a justice for admission of the local authority or any of their officers on premises shall continue in force until the nuisance has been abated, or the work for which the entry was necessary has been done.

(a) The section is very wide in regard to the officers, no particular officer being referred to; but as none can enter compulsorily against the will of the occupier, without an order of justices, this point will be cleared up by such order. The authority being a corporate body cannot enter of themselves, and should, therefore, depute this function. Members or officers so deputed must not enter premises without obtaining the permission of the occupier or without an order of a justice, if permission has been refused. If they do so enter, and the occupier interferes with them whilst they are upon the premises, no offence will be committed by him under s. 306, post (Consett U. D. C. v. Crawford, [1903] 2 K. B. 183; 67 J. P. 309).

Other powers of entry.

(b) As to entry into tents, vans, sheds, or similar structures used for human habitation, see the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, s. 9, post, Vol. II.

(c) The same right, for the purpose of enforcing orders and regulations as to dairies, cowsheds, and milkshops, is given by the Milk and Dairies (Consolidation) Act, 1915, s. 2, post, Vol. II., and for the inspection of water supply in rural districts by the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, s. 7, post.

(d) Local Acts in many instances contain such a provision.

(e) Under s. 96, ante, p. 182.

(f) See note (a).

Note to Section 102.

(g) The previous paragraph relates to the mere inspection; this to the action of the local authority under the order. See further ss. 105, 106, post, p. 205, 206.

(h) By 52 & 53 Vict. c. 63, s. 3, in all Acts of Parliament passed after 1850, the expression "oath" includes, in the case of persons for the time being allowed by law to affirm or declare instead of swearing, affirmation and declaration. As to persons entitled to affirm and the circumstances under which they may do so, see the Oaths Act, 1888, and R. v. Moore (1892), 61 L. J. M. C. 80; 56 J. P. 345; Nash v. Nawab Mahmood Ali Khan (1892), Times, March 18th.

Oath.

A sanitary inspector who applies for a warrant under s. 115 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, authorising him to enter premises to which he has been refused admission, must show to the magistrate some reasonable ground for such entry. Merely to show that in seeking admission to premises he is acting honestly with a view to the discharge of his duties, will not suffice (Vines v. North London Collegiate School (1899), 63 J. P. 244). A magistrate, although he has not to decide the question of the existence of the alleged nuisance, may consider whether there are reasonable grounds for suspecting the existence of a nuisance, and receive evidence for that purpose (Wimbledon U. D. C. v. Hastings (1902), 67 J. P. 45; 87 L. T. 118). If an order is made it should state that it is in reference to a particular subject-matter (ibid.). Cf. McVittie v. Turner (1916), 80 J. P. 25; 13 L. G. R. 1181.

Grounds of complaint.

(i) These words seem to imply personal delivery to the custodian of the premises. For a form of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 473. There is no provision in respect of empty or unoccupied premises, because there can be no refusal of admission. It is by no means clear whether admission can be forced in respect of such premises, and yet the necessity of the case may often require it.

Notice of complaint.

103. Any person who refuses to obey an order of a justice for admission of the local authority or any of their officers on any premises shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds.

Penalty for disobedience of order.

See s. 251, post, as to the recovery of such penalty.

104. All reasonable costs and expenses incurred in making a complaint, or giving notice, or in obtaining any order of the court or any justice in relation to a nuisance under this Act, or in carrying the same into effect, shall be deemed to be money paid for the use and at the request of the person on whom the order is made (a); or if the order is made on the local authority, or if no order is made, but the nuisance is proved (b) to have existed when the complaint was made or the notice given, then of the person by whose act or default the nuisance was caused; and in case of nuisances caused by the act or default of the owner (c) of premises, such costs and expenses may be recovered from any person who is for the time being owner (c) of such premises: Provided that such costs and expenses shall not exceed in the whole one year's rack-rent (d) of the premises.

Costs and expenses of execution of provisions relating to nuisances.

Such costs and expenses, and any penalties incurred in relation to any such nuisance, may be recovered in a summary manner (e) or in any county (f) or superior court; and the court shall have power to divide costs expenses and penalties between persons by whose acts or defaults a nuisance is caused as to it may seem just (g).

Any costs and expenses recoverable under this section by a local authority from an owner of premises may be recovered from the occupier for the time being of such premises (h); and the owner shall allow such occupier to deduct any moneys which he pays under this enactment out of the rent from time to time becoming due in respect of the said premises, as if the same had been actually paid to such owner as part of such rent (i) :

Provided, that no such occupier shall be required to pay any further sum than the amount of rent for the time being due from him, or which, after demand (k) of such costs or expenses from such occupier, and after notice (k) not to pay his landlord any rent without first deducting the amount of such costs or expenses, becomes payable by such occupier, unless he refuses, on application to him by the local authority, truly to disclose the amount of his rent and the name and address of the person to whom such rent is payable ; but the burden of proof that the sum demanded from any such occupier is greater than the rent due by him at the time of such notice, or which has since accrued, shall lie on such occupier :

Provided also, that nothing herein contained shall affect any contract between any owner or (sic) occupier of any house building or other property whereby it is or may be agreed that the occupier shall pay or discharge all rates dues and sums of money payable in respect of such house building or other property, or to affect any contract whatsoever between landlord and tenant (l).

(a) As the local authority will have paid the money, they will apparently be the proper plaintiffs. See also the provision as to costs in s. 96, ante, p. 182.

(b) This proof must be given in the action or in the summary proceedings.

(c) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 8. The words "for the time being owner," seem to have been inserted in order to avoid the effect of Blything Union (Guardians of) v. Warton (1863), 27 J. P. 87 ; 3 B. & S. 352, decided with reference to 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 19.

Trustees : tenants for life and remaindermen.

Questions frequently arise as to the ultimate incidence of the cost of drainage and paving work done on settled estates. Where trustees have the legal estate in premises, and are entitled for the time being to receive the "rack-rents" thereof, they are "owners" within the meaning of s. 4. See In re Barney, Harrison v. Barney, [1894] 3 Ch. 562 ; In re Lever, Cordwell v. Lever, [1897] 1 Ch. 32. But when trustees are "owners" and have executed works, the question as to who must ultimately bear the expense is not easy to determine. In In re Barney, supra, trustees incurred expenses for drainage works in respect of houses which were without sufficient drains. It was held that they had rightly paid the expenses out of capital, and that as between the tenant for life and remainderman the capital moneys so applied must be treated as a charge upon the premises. Cf., however, In re Crawley, cited on p. 195, post, which is apparently at variance with In re Barney, supra. In In re Lever, supra, where sanitary works were executed under the P. H. (London) A., 1891, upon leasehold houses forming part of a residuary bequest to trustees upon trust for tenant for life and remainderman, it was again held that the cost was payable out of the capital of the residuary estate. A later case would at first sight appear to decide that as between tenant for life and remainderman the cost of complying with a sanitary notice under the P. H. (London) A., 1891, and the Housing of the Working Classes Acts, and a dangerous structure notice under the London Building Act, 1894, was chargeable as against income. See In re Copland's Settlement, Johns v. Carden, [1900] 1 Ch. 326. If, however, the case is carefully examined it will be seen that the only point decided was that there is no distinction in the position of an equitable tenant for life of leaseholds when the property is sublet at a rack-rent, and when it is sublet at an improved ground rent. It was admitted that the income would be chargeable had not the property been sublet at an improved ground rent. It will be seen from the judgment that the superior lease made the tenant liable to pay for complying with the notices in question, and this perhaps distinguishes the case from In re Lever, supra. The general rule would appear to be that where works have been executed under a notice from a sanitary authority, and the trustees (or the life tenant who has arranged with them to provide the money required) apply to the court to be indemnified out of the estate, it is competent to the court to determine how the expense shall be borne, having regard to the permanent or temporary nature of the work done (In re Farnham's Settlement, [1904] 2 Ch. 561; and cf. In re Thomas, Weatherall v. Thomas, [1900] 1 Ch. 319; In re Partington, Reigh v. Kane, [1902] 1 Ch. 711; In re Tubbs, Dykes v. Tubbs, [1915] 2 Ch. 137).

A legal or equitable tenant for life in possession would appear to be the "owner" (Re Smith's Settled Estates, [1901] 1 Ch. 689), and, if such a tenant for life pays expenses which have been incurred by an authority, and which constitute a charge upon property by virtue of s. 257, he is entitled to keep the charge alive as an incumbrance on the settled land, and to raise money under s. 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, by mortgage of the estate for the purpose of discharging it (ibid.). See also In re Pizzi, Scrivener and Others v. Aldridge and Others, [1907] 1 Ch. 67; 71 J. P. 58, decided under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. In another case expenses incurred by an authority in sewering, paving, and flagging new streets on settled land were charged on the land and made payable, with interest thereon, by instalments. It was held that the expenses so charged were payable out of capital moneys under s. 21 (ii) of the Settled Land Act, 1882; and that the tenant for life was entitled to repayment of instalments already paid by him so far as they represented capital, and that the trustees ought to pay the corresponding portion of the unpaid instalments (In re Legh's Settled Estate, [1902] 2 Ch. 274; 66 J. P. 600).

When an equitable tenant for life, by arrangement with the trustees, executes sanitary works he is entitled by subrogation to the rights of the trustees (In re Farnham's Settlement, supra).

(d) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 15.

(e) See s. 251, post. The money, if sought to be recovered summarily, will be a civil debt within the meaning of the S. J. A., 1879, ss. 6, 35.

Jurisdiction of county court.

(f) See also s. 261, post. It was held upon the corresponding section (s. 3) of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 123, that whatever may have been the amount of the costs, and although a question of title to the land on which the nuisance existed arose, the county court had jurisdiction by the express terms of the Act (R. v. Harden (1854), 2 El. & Bl. 188; Hertford Union (Guardians of) v. Kimpton (1855), 11 Ex. 295; 19 J. P. 678). But that Act provided for the recovery of the costs and expenses in any county court, or before two justices. No reference was made to a superior court as in the text; and it is submitted that while a remedy is provided by this section for the recovery of costs, etc. to any amount, in a summary manner, the county court can only be resorted to when the amount is within its jurisdiction.

(g) Apparently this must be done at the risk of the complainants, for if the costs and expenses be divided, some of the defendants may be unable to pay their shares, and there would then, as it seems, be no recourse to the others. Hence the complainants should be heard before the order is made in this form.

Remedy against occupier.

(h) In Bermondsey (Vestry of) v. Ramsey (1871), L. R. 6 C. P. 247; 35 J. P. 567, it was held with respect to a similar clause in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, s. 36, that an unsatisfied judgment against the owner for paving expenses was no bar to an action for the same expenses against the occupier. So also as to proceedings against a subsequent owner, Plumstead Board of Works v. Ingoldby (1873), L. R. 8 Ex. 63, 174; 37 J. P. 759, and cases cited in the notes to s. 257, post. The text applies only to costs and expenses which the authority are entitled to recover from the owner under the preceding sections. Therefore, expenditure by a tenant in abating a structural nuisance pursuant to a magistrate's order after notice to abate served on the tenant only cannot be set off against rent due to the landlord (Butcher v. Ruth (1887), 22 L. R. Ir. 380).

(i) Under a similar section with a similar proviso (s. 96 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862) it has been held that where a tenant has covenanted with his landlord to bear expenses (similar to those referred to in s. 104, supra), he has no right to deduct from his rent the amount of such expenses after they have been paid by him, and that the landlord's right to distrain for unpaid rent is not affected (Skinner

v. Hunt, [1904] 2 K. B. 452 ; 68 J. P. 402). It has also been held that in order to entitle an occupier to avail himself of the provision, the money must have been actually paid ; and consequently that a distress for rent accrued due after a notice under that section levied before payment to the vestry which gave the notice was not illegal (Ryan v. Thompson (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 144 ; 32 J. P. 135).

(k) The authority must make this demand and give the notice. As to authentication and service of such notice, see ss. 266, 267, post. For forms of demand and notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 475.

It frequently happens that statutes which impose a burden primarily upon the owner of premises, contain express provisions enabling landlords and tenants to agree between themselves that the burden shall ultimately fall on the latter. Such burdens sometimes take the form of an obligation on an owner to pay money to a local authority in respect of work done for the benefit of premises, e.g., paving work under the Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 and 1862, and under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. In other cases the duty is cast upon the owner of doing the work himself, but on his default the authority may carry out the work and charge him with the cost, e.g., work done in the abatement of nuisances caused by structural defects under ss. 94—98 of the P. H. A., 1875, or ss. 4 and 5 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, and paving work done under s. 150 of the P. H. A., 1875. Section 104, supra, expressly provides for the making of agreements as to who shall ultimately bear expenses incurred for the abatement of nuisances under this Act, and a similar provision is contained in s. 121 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891. Section 226, post, also preserves the rights of landlords and tenants to agree as to rates made under Part VI. of this Act.

Incidence of cost as between landlord and tenant.

Owners of premises have, not unnaturally, tried to so frame covenants in leases granted by them as to cast upon the lessees the burden of whatever expenses have to be met in respect of the demised premises. In so far as such expenses represent permanent improvements of which they will not get the full benefit, tenants have, quite naturally, sought to escape payment. The result has been that a large number of cases turning upon the construction of covenants as to rates, etc., have come before the courts. The principle of law underlying the cases is the same whether the expenses are those of the nature referred to in s. 104, supra, or are expenses in connection with paving, etc., and the decisions on both points are therefore collected in this note.

Prior to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Foulger v. Arding, post, p. 199, the authorities on the subject were in an unsatisfactory condition, and even now, although many cases decided since Foulger v. Arding, post, have further cleared the air, it cannot be said that the law is clear. It will, however, probably be found that the authorities warrant the following propositions : (1) primâ facie a covenant which merely throws " rates, taxes and assessments " upon a tenant, imposes upon him a liability to pay only assessments of a temporary or recurring nature ; (2) a covenant containing such words as " duties," " outgoings," " impositions," or " charges " may impose upon a tenant a liability to pay for permanent improvements of the demised premises.

A lease in which a tenant merely covenants to pay his " rent without deduction " cannot be construed as a contract between landlord and tenant which will oust the statutory right of the tenant to deduct the payments referred to in the section. See Home and Colonial Stores v. Tod (1891), 63 L. T. 829, decided under the similarly worded section (s. 96) of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862.

By a local Act commissioners were authorised to flag footways, and the cost thereof was to be paid by the tenants or occupiers of the houses next adjoining. Another clause enabled a tenant to deduct the cost so paid by him out of his rent :—Held, that this charge was within the terms of a covenant in a lease subsequently made, whereby the tenant covenanted to pay all taxes, rates, duties, levies, assessments and payments whatsoever, which were or during the term might be rated, levied, assessed, or imposed on the premises (Payne v. Burridge (1844), 12 M. & W. 727, followed in Brett v. Rogers, post, p. 197).

Expenses of drainage works done upon premises under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, were held to be payable by a lessee under a covenant to pay, bear and discharge "all such parliamentary, parochial, county, district, and occasional levies, rates, assessments, taxes, charges, impositions, contributions, burdens, duties and services whatsoever, as during the term should be taxed, assessed, or imposed upon or in respect of the premises or any part thereof" (Sweet v. Seager (1857), 21 J. P. 406; 2 C. B. (N.S.) 119).

The plaintiff demised premises to the defendant for seven years, at the "clear yearly rent" of £90, the latter covenanting to "pay and discharge all taxes, rates, assessments and impositions whatsoever (except property tax) which during the term should become payable in respect of the demised premises." It was held that the tenant was not liable to pay sewering and paving expenses under a local Act which empowered the local authority to order streets to be sewered and paved by the owners of the adjoining premises, and in case of default of such owners to do the work themselves and to charge the respective owners with their proportionate parts of the expenses thereof. The plaintiff neglected to do the required work, and the authority caused it to be done, and the plaintiff paid his apportioned share. The Court of Common Pleas, distinguishing Sweet v. Seager, supra, held that the payment was not made by the plaintiff for a rate, assessment, or imposition which had become payable in respect of the demised premises, but was in the nature of a penalty for the breach of the duty imposed upon him by the Act of Parliament (Tidswell v. Whitworth (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 326). This case was followed in Rawlins v. Briggs, post, p. 194, and distinguished in Midgley v. Coppock, post, p. 194.

Tidswell v. Whitworth, supra, was distinguished in the following year. A lessee covenanted that he would, during his term, pay and discharge "all taxes, rates, duties, and assessments whatsoever which during the continuance of the demise should be taxed, assessed, or imposed on the tenant or landlord of the premises demised in respect thereof." It was held that the tenant was liable to pay paving expenses charged by the vestry against the landlord under the Metropolis Management Acts on the ground that the amount charged was a "duty" imposed upon the owner in respect of the premises within the covenant (Thompson v. Lapworth (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 149; 32 J. P. 184). This case was distinguished in Rawlins v. Briggs, post, p. 194, and followed in Wix v. Rutson, post, p. 198.

Tidswell v. Whitworth, supra, and Thompson v. Lapworth, supra, are the starting points of two streams of authorities, as to which COLLINS, M.R., in Foulger v. Arding, post, p. 199, said: "The distinction which appears to have been taken between the covenants in Tidswell v. Whitworth and Thompson v. Lapworth, and for some time to have been treated as the cardinal distinction in such cases, was that in the first of those cases there was no reference to any persons upon whom the impositions intended to be covered by the covenant were charged or imposed, whereas, in the second, the covenant spoke of them as imposed 'on the tenant or landlord of the premises demised in respect thereof.' It appears to me that, in the earlier cases which followed, stress was laid on the presence or absence of words of this kind rather than on the words used in the description of the nature of the obligations included in the covenant, and the presence or absence in that description of particular words such as 'duties' or 'outgoings.' Later on greater emphasis appears to have been laid in the cases on the presence of words like 'duties' or 'outgoings' in the description of the obligations included in the covenant than on that of words describing the person or persons on whom they were imposed. Brett v. Rogers (post, p. 197) may be referred to as one of the latter class of cases, the last of which is Farlow v. Stevenson (post, p. 198), where the court no doubt gave effect to the word 'duties' as throwing the obligation on the tenant, though there were no words in the covenant describing the person or persons on whom the duties were imposed."

A landlord's covenant to pay all rates, taxes, tithes, and all other charges payable in respect of the premises, was held not to apply to the cost of cleansing a piece of ornamental water effected under an order in execution of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, s. 16 (Bird v. Elwes (1868), L. R. 3 Ex. 225; 32 J. P. 694).

A lessee covenanted to pay all outgoings charged on the premises or on the landlord in respect thereof. The lessee, after receipt of a notice, constructed a drain, having arranged with the landlord that he should do so, and that whichever one of them was legally liable should ultimately bear the charge. It was decided that the lessee was liable (Crosse v. Raw (1874), L. R. 9 Ex. 209). This decision was followed in a case where the plaintiff demised premises at a yearly rent "clear of all present and future rates, taxes, and deductions," to the defendants who covenanted to pay the rent, and also to bear and pay all the rates, taxes, and outgoings then payable or thereafter to become payable in respect of the premises. The plaintiff having paid certain paving expenses, sued the defendants for the amount. It was held that the omission of the word "outgoings" in the reddendum clause did not qualify the covenant so as to take it out of the decision in Crosse v. Raw, supra, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to recover (Gardner v. Furness Rail. Co. (1883), 47 J. P. 232). Crosse v. Raw, supra, was also approved of by the Court of Appeal in Budd v. Marshall, infra.

A lessee for a term of twenty-one years covenanted to pay the rent reserved "without any deduction or abatement except land tax and landlord's property tax," and further "to pay and discharge all and all manner of taxes, rates, charges, assessments, and impositions whatever (except as aforesaid) then or at any time or times during the term to be charged, assessed, or imposed on the premises thereby demised, or in respect thereof, or of the said rent as aforesaid, by authority of Parliament or otherwise howsoever." The lessor, in compliance with a notice received under s. 94 of this Act, executed works necessary to abate a nuisance arising from the bad condition of the drains upon the premises. It was held by the Court of Common Pleas, upon the authority of Tidswell v. Whitworth, supra, and distinguishing Thompson v. Lapworth, supra, that the payment made by the lessor for the works was not a "rate, charge, assessment, or imposition assessed or imposed on the demised premises or in respect thereof," but was made in performance of a duty imposed upon him by the Act of Parliament, and that he was not entitled to call upon the lessee to repay the amount (Rawlins v. Briggs (1878), 3 C. P. D. 368). It should be observed that in this case, s. 257, post, was not cited. It is difficult to reconcile this decision with the decision in George v. Coates, post, p. 200, and it must, we think, be regarded as overruled.

A lease contained covenants to pay the rent clear of all deductions for or in respect of the sewers rate or any other rates, taxes, duties, charges, and assessments whatsoever, whether parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise howsoever, except income tax on rent; and further, that the lessee would at all times bear, pay and discharge the land tax (if any), sewers rate, borough rate, improvement rate, tithes and tithe rent-charge in lieu of tithes, and all other taxes, rates, duties, and assessments whatsoever, whether parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, which then were, or which at any time or times thereafter during the said term should be taxed, charged, rated, assessed, or imposed on the said premises or any part thereof, or upon the landlord or tenant in respect thereof, or in respect of the said yearly rent, except as aforesaid. There was also a covenant by the lessee to repair. It was held by the Court of Appeal (BAGGALLAY and BRAMWELL, L.JJ., BRETT, L.J., dissenting) that the tenant was liable to repay to the landlord the expense of making good defective drainage on the requirement of the local sanitary authority under the P. H. A., 1875, the expense being a "duty" within the meaning of the covenant (Budd and Another v. Marshall (1880), 5 C. P. D. 481; 44 J. P. 584). This decision was followed by NORTH, J., in In re Bettingham, Melhado v. Woodcock (1892), 9 T. L. R. 48, and by WILLS, J., in Clayton v. Smith (1895), 11 T. L. R. 374. See also In re Robertson and Thorne (1883), 47 J. P. 566, and Smith v. Robinson, post, p. 196.

The plaintiffs bought of the defendant three houses, and by the contract of sale the latter agreed to discharge "all rates, taxes, and outgoings," up to the time of completion. The purchase was completed, and afterwards payment was demanded from the plaintiffs of expenses incurred under a local Act in improving the street in which the houses stood. The work had been done before the houses belonged to the defendant, and at the time of the sale to the plaintiffs neither party knew of the charge. The plaintiffs, having paid the sum demanded, sued the defendant for repayment. It was held, distinguishing Tidswell v. Whitworth, ante, p. 193, that the charge for improving the street was an "outgoing" which the defendant had bound himself to discharge, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover (Midgley and Another v. Coppock (1879), 4 Ex. D. 309; 43 J. P. 683). This case was followed in Tubbs v. Wynne, post, p. 197.

The defendant, on taking a house, covenanted to pay "all rates, taxes, charges, and assessments whatsoever, which now are, or may be, charged or assessed upon the said premises or any part thereof, or upon any person or persons in respect thereof." It was held that paving expenses under s. 150, post, p. 286, were "a charge upon the premises," or "upon a person in respect thereof," so as to entitle the lessor to recover from the defendant the amount of such expenses paid by him (Hartley v. Hudson (1879), 4 C. P. D. 367; 43 J. P. 784).

A lessee for a term of seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years of a house in a new street in the metropolis, covenanted to pay all rates and assessments taxed, rated, charged, assessed, or imposed upon the demised premises, or upon or payable by the occupier or tenant in respect thereof. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the tenant was not liable to repay to the landlord the amount of paving expenses apportioned in respect of the demised house under the Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 and 1862, as it was not charged on the premises, but was charged or imposed by the Acts on the owner in respect of the premises (Allum v. Dickinson (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 632; 47 J. P. 102).

A tenant of premises in the metropolis agreed to pay "all rates, taxes and assessments payable in respect of the premises during the term." The street in which the premises were was paved by the vestry. It was held by the Divisional Court that the sum assessed upon the owners as their proportion of the expenses of paving the street was not a rate, tax, or assessment within the meaning of the covenant, but a charge imposed upon the owners for the permanent improvement of their property (Wilkinson v. Collyer (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 1; 48 J. P. 791).

It should be noticed that in the metropolis, paving expenses are not a charge upon the premises, while they are such a charge in districts subject to the P. H. A., 1875. See s. 257, post. It is submitted that this is the true point of distinction between the last two cases and Hartley v. Hudson, supra.

By a lease of land in the metropolis the lessee covenanted that he would pay "the tithe or rent-charge in lieu of tithes, land tax (if any), sewers rates, main drainage rates, and all other taxes, rates, impositions, and outgoings whatsoever, then or thereafter to be charged or imposed on or in respect of the said premises, or on any part thereof (except the landlord's property tax)." The lessor having had to pay his share of the cost of paving a new street, sought to recover the amount from the lessee, but MATHEW, J., held that the case was governed by Tidswell v. Whitworth, ante, p. 193, and Rawlins v. Briggs, ante, p. 194, and gave judgment for the defendant (Hill v. Edward, W. N. (1885) 32). It is difficult to reconcile the decision in this case with the later decisions.

A lessee of a house in a new street in the metropolis covenanted to pay "all existing and future taxes, rates, assessments, land tax, tithe, or tithe rent-charge, and outgoings of every description for the time being payable either by the landlord or tenant in respect of the said premises." It was held by the Divisional Court that the owner's proportion of the cost of paving the street was an "outgoing" payable by the lessee under the covenant (Aldridge v. Fearn (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 212). The court pointed out that the words of the covenant in this case were more comprehensive than in Wilkinson v. Collyer or Hill v. Edward, supra.

A testator directed the rents and profits of a leasehold house "after payment of all ordinary outgoings for ground rent, repairs, taxes, expenses of insurance or otherwise," to be paid to his widow for life, and after her death to certain other persons. The trustees of the will, upon notice from the vestry under the Metropolis Management Acts, executed certain drainage works. It was held that the cost of the works was an "outgoing" within the meaning of that term as used in the will, and must therefore be paid by the tenant for life (Re Crawley, Acton v. Crawley (1885), 28 Ch. D. 431; 49 J. P. 598). See, however, as to this later cases in note (c), ante, p. 190.

By an agreement for a lease of a house for three years at a rent of £75 per annum, the tenant agreed "to pay all sewers rates, tithe rent-charge, land tax (if any) and all existing and future rates, taxes, assessments, and outgoings of every description payable by landlord or tenant in respect of the premises during the tenancy (except the landlord's property tax)." The local board made a claim upon the landlord and tenant for the amount of paving expenses apportioned in respect of the house. It was held that the words of the agreement were wide enough to cover this payment, and that their meaning could not be regarded as altered because the agreement was only for a term of three years. It was held, therefore, that the tenant must pay the amount claimed by the board (Batchelor v. Bigger (1889), 60 L. T. 416).

The plaintiffs were tenants of a house under a lease from the defendant, by which a rent of £40 was reserved "to be paid without deduction, except landlord's property tax, by equal quarterly payments, free and clear from all deductions for main drainage and sewer rates, metropolitan and local improvement rates, taxes, land tax, tithe rent-charge and commutation in lieu of tithes," and the lessees covenanted to pay "the said yearly rent of £40 at the times and in manner aforesaid, free and clear of all deductions, except as aforesaid," and to pay and discharge during the said tenancy all main drainage and sewer rates, etc. (following the words of the reservation). The vestry required the defendant, as owner of the premises, to construct a drain into the common sewer under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 73, and the defendant not complying, did the work themselves, and recovered the costs, £17 17*s.*, from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs deducted this amount from their next half-year's rent, and upon the defendant threatening to distrain, brought an action for an injunction to restrain him. It was held that the payment in question was not within the express covenant in the lease (Home and Colonial Stores v. Tod (1891), 63 L. T. 829). It has already been pointed out that the covenant to pay the rent "without deduction" could not be construed as a contract between landlord and tenant to exclude the tenant's right to deduct this payment from his rent. See p. 192, ante.

A tenant covenanted to pay all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever which then were or during the said term should be imposed or assessed upon the demised premises or the landlord or tenant in respect thereof by authority of Parliament or otherwise, and also to make, uphold, support, cleanse, and repair, and keep in repair, all sewers, drains, cesspools, necessaries, privies, vaults, and other easements belonging to the demised premises. The local authority served on the mortgagee in possession (as the owner) a notice requiring him to abate a nuisance arising from pumping sewage from a cesspool, and on the owner's default, did the work. The owner paid the expenses under threat of legal proceedings, and brought an action to recover them from the tenant. A. L. SMITH, J., held that the tenant was not liable under either covenant (Lyon v. Greenhow (1892), 8 T. L. R. 457).

A lessee covenanted to pay, bear and discharge all land tax, sewers rate, main drainage rate, and all other rates, taxes, assessments charges, or impositions whatsoever, parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, taxed, charged, assessed, or imposed upon the demised premises, or on the lessor for or in respect of the premises. He also covenanted to repair, but failed to do so, in consequence of which a drain on the premises got out of order, and caused a nuisance. The sanitary authority made an order on the lessor, under the P. H. (London) A., 1891, to abate the nuisance. The lessor incurred expenses in complying with this order and sued the lessee for the amount:—Held (approving In re Bettingham, Melhado v. Woodcock, ante, p. 194), that the expenses so incurred were a charge imposed on the lessor in respect of the premises, and that the lessor was entitled to recover (Smith v. Robinson, [1893] 2 Q. B. 53; 58 J. P. 73).

Freehold messuages were devised to trustees, their heirs and assigns, upon trust, to permit A. and B. during their joint lives, and the survivor of them during his life, to hold the same, and receive the rents, and after the death of the survivor, upon trust for the first and other sons of B. successively in strict settlement. During the life of one of the equitable tenants for life, the trustees applied certain capital moneys held by them upon similar trusts in payment of expenses incurred for drainage works in respect of the devised messuages, which were without sufficient drains as specified in the P. H. A., 1848, s. 49:—Held, that the trustees were "owners" within the meaning of that Act, and had rightly paid the drainage expenses in question out of the capital moneys; but that as between the tenant for life and the remainderman the capital moneys so applied must be treated as a charge upon the property. By a clause in his will the testator declared that the parties beneficially entitled to the rents and profits of any of his houses should keep the same in good and absolute repair:—Held, that these drainage works were not repairs within the meaning of that clause (Re Barney, Harrison v. Barney, [1894] 3 Ch. 562). See also note (c) on p. 190, ante.

By conditions of sale of land within the metropolis the date fixed for completion was May 8th, all outgoings up to that date being cleared up by the vendor. Before May 8th a magistrate made an order to take down dangerous structures on the land. This order was not complied with, and after May 8th, the county council took down the structures and demanded and received from the purchaser the expenses of so doing. It was held, following Midgley v. Coppock, ante, p. 194, that the liability having been incurred before May 8th, the expenses were "out-goings" which the purchaser was entitled to recover from the vendor (Tubbs v. Wynne, [1897] 1 Q. B. 74). This decision was followed in Barsht v. Tagg, post, p. 198. See also In re Highett and Bird's Contract, [1903] 1 Ch. 287, and the observations on this case by ROMER, L.J., in In re Allen and Driscoll's Contract, [1904] 2 Ch. 226; 68 J. P. 469

A lessee covenanted to pay "the land tax, sewers rate, and all other taxes, rates, duties, assessments, and impositions, parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, which now are or shall at any time during this demise be assessed or imposed on or in respect of the said demised premises or of the rent hereby reserved (landlord's property tax only excepted)." It was held by the Divisional Court, following Payne v. Burridge, ante, p. 192, that the tenant was liable to pay drainage expenses incurred by the lessor in complying with the requirement of the vestry under the P. H. (London) A., 1891. The obligation imposed upon the lessor to take up a defective drain and lay a new one, was a "duty" imposed on the lessor in respect of the demised premises (Brett v. Rogers, [1897] 1 Q. B. 525). This decision was approved and followed in Farlow v. Stevenson, post, p. 198.

A tenant of premises outside the metropolis covenanted to pay "all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever, which now are, or during the term shall be, imposed or assessed upon the premises, or the landlords or tenants in respect thereof, by authority of Parliament or otherwise, except the landlord's property tax." CHANNELL, J., held that the lessee was not liable to pay paving expenses recovered in a summary manner from the owner under s. 150, post, p. 286 (Baylis and Another v. Jiggens and Another, [1898] 2 Q. B. 315).

The decision in the last-mentioned case was followed by the Divisional Court in Lumby v. Faupel (1903), 88 L. T. 562; 67 J. P. 202, where it was held that a landlord who had paid paving expenses under s. 150, post, p. 286, could not recover from a tenant whose covenant was "to pay all rates, taxes, and assessments whatsoever which now are or during the said term shall be imposed or assessed upon the said premises." On appeal this decision was affirmed, but on another ground, viz., that upon which Surtees v. Woodhouse was decided. See that case, post, p. 200, and also Lumby v. Faupel (in the Court of Appeal) cited therewith.

In a lease of a factory for twenty-one years the tenants covenanted to pay all rates and taxes, sewers rate, main drainage rate, parish dues, and all other rates, taxes, impositions and outgoings whatsoever which were then or should at any time thereafter be assessed, charged, or in anywise imposed upon or in respect of the demised premises by authority of Parliament or otherwise. Also to pay a fair share and proportion of all costs and expenses which the lessors, in respect of being owners and lessors of the premises demised, might be called upon to pay, bear or contribute, or would be liable to in or about every or any reparation, pulling down, rebuilding or raising of every or any party wall, party fence wall, timber partition, or party arch, or incidental thereto, or in or about any drainage or sewerage, or otherwise by virtue of any Act or Acts of Parliament. During the term the lessors, as owners of the demised premises were compelled to spend £710 in constructing a fire-escape according to the requirements of s. 7 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891. In an action to recover this expense from the tenant, it was held that this was not an imposition or outgoing under the first covenant, and that even if it was, the second covenant was to be read as a proviso on the first and took it out of the first. The tenant was therefore only liable to pay a fair share of the expense (Arding v. Economic Printing and Publishing Co. (1898), 79 L. T. 622; 15 T. L. R. 111).

The expense of paving a new street incurred by a landlord under s. 77 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, was held to be recoverable by him from a tenant who had covenanted to pay and discharge all taxes, charges, rates, duties, tithes and tithe rent-charge, assessments and impositions whatsoever which are now or may at any time hereafter be taxed, charged, rated, assessed, or imposed upon the premises or any part thereof, or upon the landlord or tenant in respect thereof, landlord's property tax only excepted (Wix v. Rutson, [1899] 1 Q. B. 474). This decision followed Thompson v. Lapworth, ante, p. 193.

A covenant by a lessee to pay all sewers rates, and all other rates, taxes, outgoings and assessments whatsoever imposed or assessed upon or payable in respect of the premises, was held to include the cost of works amounting to a reconstruction of the house drainage necessary in order to comply with a notice to abate a nuisance on the premises given under the P. H. (London) A., 1891 (Antil v. Godwin (1899), 15 T. L. R. 426; 63 J. P. 441).

A lessee who had covenanted to pay "all taxes, rates, duties, and assessments whatsoever, which now are or hereafter may become payable for or in respect of the demised premises," was held liable as between himself and his landlord, to pay for the reconstruction of a drain required by the vestry under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 85 (Farlow v. Stevenson, [1900] 1 Ch. 128, approving and following Brett v. Rogers, ante, p. 197).

Conditions of sale for the purchase of leaseholds provided that the purchase should be completed on August 11th, and that a purchaser paying his purchase-money should as from that day be let into possession or receipt of rents and profits, and up to that date all rents, rates, taxes and outgoings were, if necessary, to be apportioned, and such apportioned rents were to be paid on completion by each purchaser to the vendor. If the completion of the purchase was delayed beyond the before-mentioned day, the remainder of the purchase-money was to bear interest from that day to the day of actual payment thereof, or at the option of the vendor he might receive the rents and profits up to the day of the actual completion of the purchase. Owing to the purchaser's default the purchase was not completed on the date fixed, and the vendor remained in possession of the rents and profits. In November, notices were served upon the vendor under the P. H. (London) A., 1891, to abate nuisances on the premises, and the vendor in complying with the notices expended a sum of £24. In an action for specific performance by the purchaser, the vendor claimed to be entitled to payment by the purchaser of the £24, as well as of the balance of the purchase-money. It was held, following Tubbs v. Wynne, ante, p. 197, that £24 being an outgoing, which from the time when a good title was shown must clearly be borne by the purchaser in the absence of express stipulation, the plaintiff would, as from August 11th, have been entitled to the rents and profits, and liable to pay the £24 if the conditions had not given the vendor the option to keep the rents and profits in lieu of interest; but that there was nothing to relieve the plaintiff from the obligation to pay the outgoings, and that he could only obtain specific performance on paying the £24 and the balance of his purchase-money (Barsht v. Tagg, [1900] 1 Ch. 231).

Conditions of sale of leasehold premises in an urban district provided that the purchaser should be entitled to possession or to the rents and profits as from September 29th, down to which time all outgoings were to be paid by the vendor. On July 26th, the district council served a notice under s. 150, post, p. 286, requiring the owner to sewer, level, and make up the street within one calendar month. The purchaser called on the vendor to comply with this notice, contending that the expense was an outgoing within the meaning of the condition of sale. This the vendor denied, and refused to do the work, and the work was done by the council, but after September 29th, and they apportioned the sum to be paid in respect of the premises at £153 15*s.* 10*d.* BYRNE, J., held that the vendor was not liable to pay it as an outgoing under the conditions of sale (Re Waterhouse's Contract (1900), 44 Sol. J. 645).

The lessee of a factory covenanted to pay and discharge "all rates, taxes, charges, and assessments and outgoings whatsoever, whether parliamentary, parochial, local, or of any other description, which now are or may at any time hereafter be assessed, charged, or imposed upon the demised premises, or the landlord or occupier in respect thereof (the landlord's property tax only excepted) . . . and from time to time and at all times during the said term well and substantially to repair, cleanse, maintain, amend and keep the demised premises and all additions or additional buildings . . . with all necessary reparations, cleansings, and amendments whatsoever, original structural defects in the building of the premises excepted . . ." It was held by the King's Bench Division that the lessee was not liable to bear the expenses to which the lessor had been put in complying with requirements (i.e., the provision of means of escape from fire) under s. 7 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891 (Monk v. Arnold, [1902] 1 K. B. 761). So far as this decision turned on the wording of the covenant, it was based upon that of the same court in Foulger v. Arding, [1901] 2 K. B. 151, which was reversed on appeal. See infra. It is now, however, clear that in such cases under s. 7, the High Court has no jurisdiction at all. See Stuckey v. Hooke, Horner v. Franklin, and Monro v. Lord Burghclere, post, pp. 201, 202.

A lessee covenanted to pay "all rates, taxes, assessments, and outgoings then payable, or thereafter becoming payable, whether by the landlord or tenant in respect of the said demised premises, or any part thereof, or in respect of the rent or any part thereof." It was held by the King's Bench Division that the lessee was liable for apportioned paving expenses under s. 150, post, p. 286, which the landlord had paid (Weld and Others v. Clayton-le-Moors U. D. C. (1902), 86 L. T. 584).

Foulger v. Arding.

Many of the above cases came up for consideration by the Court of Appeal in Foulger v. Arding, [1902] 1 K. B. 700, where the facts were as follows: The defendant was tenant to the plaintiff of a dwelling-house under a lease for sixteen years from 1892. The lease contained a covenant that the tenant would "pay and discharge all taxes rates including sewers main drainage assessments and impositions whatsoever which now are or which at any time or times hereafter during the continuance of the said term hereby granted be taxed rated assessed charged or imposed upon or in respect of the said premises or any part thereof on the landlord tenant or occupier of the same premises by authority of Parliament or otherwise howsoever (landlord's property tax and tithe only excepted)." It contained no covenant to repair by either landlord or tenant. The sanitary authority required the lessor to abate a nuisance caused by a foul and offensive privy on the premises, and to remove the privy and construct a water-closet. The lessor did the work, and it was held that he was entitled to recover the expense incurred by him in so doing, such expense being covered by the words "impositions charged or imposed upon or in respect of the said premises on the landlord tenant or occupier of the same." COLLINS, M.R., in giving judgment, said: "The decisions on this subject remove one or two difficulties which might arise, if the construction of such a covenant as this were being considered for the first time. It is clear on the authorities that, where there is a defect inherent in the structure of the premises at the time of the demise, and which is the subject-matter of an obligation imposed by statute on the landlord, the burden of that obligation may, nevertheless, by a covenant of this kind, be thrown upon the tenant. It is also clear from the authorities that a covenant of this kind may, if it contains appropriate words, be construed as being directed, not only to recurring charges such as rates and taxes, but also to charges in the nature of capital expenditure incurred once for all, such as charges in respect of structural work. If the matter were unencumbered by authority, and could be looked at with clear eyes, regardless of the labyrinth of cases on the subject, I think that no one could doubt that an obligation, such as that in the present case, imposed upon a landlord in respect of a structural defect, which he was bound by statute to remedy, or to pay the cost of remedying, might properly be described as an imposition charged or imposed upon the landlord in respect of the premises. It seems to me that, if the matter were clear of authority, the obligation imposed on the plaintiff in this case would come within the plain meaning of the words of the covenant. The only possible answer appears to me to be that which was indicated by an observation of my brother ROMER during the argument. It may be asked, if so wide a sense is to be given to the word 'imposition,' where is the line to be drawn? If it is to be construed as capable of covering this case, must it not be equally capable of covering such a case as one in which demised premises were built beyond the building line of a street, and there was a consequent obligation on the landlord to pull down part of the premises and rebuild in conformity with the building line? It is said that it could not possibly be contended that such an obligation was within the meaning of the term 'imposition' as used in a covenant of this kind. This argument may, as it seems to me, be met by pointing out that underlying the whole matter is the consideration that we are dealing with a contract of demise between landlord and tenant, and the covenant must be assumed to relate only to matters which may reasonably be supposed to have been contemplated by the parties as being within the purview of such a contract; and such an extreme case as that of an obligation to pull down and rebuild the premises is so far outside of anything that can possibly be conceived of as being within the contemplation of the parties that it is necessarily excluded from the meaning of words which might otherwise have been wide enough to include it." His lordship later on said: "I think that, apart from authority, it would be impossible to say that the word 'impositions' is not large enough to cover the obligation in the present case"; and he proceeded to show that there was nothing in the authorities to debar the court from giving its natural meaning to that word, and then said: "it seems to me also that an obligation of this kind is one of the very things that the parties would probably contemplate in entering into this covenant, as being a matter which might ordinarily arise as an incident of the relation between landlord and tenant. It is not an imposition of a class which is so far outside that relation that it could not have been contemplated by the parties."

According to the last mentioned decision, the course to be pursued, when construing covenants in leases, would appear to be to first determine whether the words of the covenant are primâ facie wide enough to cover the obligation in question, and, if they are, to ascertain whether the obligation is one of a class which would reasonably be within the contemplation of the parties. The ground of the decision in Foulger v. Arding, supra, has since been frequently applied.

A lessee covenanted to pay and discharge all land tax, sewer rate, main drainage rate, tithes, tithe rent-charge, and all parliamentary, parochial and other rates, assessments and impositions whatsoever which should or might be laid, imposed on, or payable in respect of [a factory] or any part thereof during the term. This was held (following Foulger v. Arding, supra) to impose upon the lessee the liability to repay to the lessor the expenses incurred in complying with a requirement under s. 7 (2) of the Factory Act, 1891 (Shephard v. Barber (1903), 1 L. G. R. 157; 67 J. P. 238).

A lessee of a house for seven years covenanted "to pay during the term the sewers rate and all other taxes, rates, charges, and assessments whatsoever, parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, which then were or thereafter should be imposed, charged, or assessed, upon or in respect of the premises, or payable by either the owner or occupier in respect of the same, the landlord's property tax only excepted." In compliance with a notice from the local authority the lessee repaired a defective drain which was causing a nuisance, and sought to recover from the lessor the cost of so doing. It was held by the Court of Appeal that the case was not distinguishable from Foulger v. Arding, supra, and that the lessee could not recover (George v. Coates (1903), 88 L. T. 48).

A lessee covenanted to pay and bear "all present and future rates, taxes, duties, assessments and outgoings charged upon the said premises or the owner or occupier in respect thereof." He sublet the premises, the sub-lessee covenanting "to observe and perform all the lessee's covenants and conditions contained in the original lease, and to indemnify [the lessee] from and against all claims and demands in respect thereof." Before the date of the sub-lease the local authority completed certain private street works under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, but the final apportionment on the adjoining premises, including the premises in question, was not made until after the sub-lease. The lessee having paid to his lessor the amount apportioned in respect of the premises, as being an "outgoing" within the terms of the covenant in the head lease, sought to recover the amount from the sub-lessee:—Held, that the apportioned amount, though not then ascertained, became a charge on the premises and owner as from the date of the completion of the works; and that, as the date of the sub-lease was subsequent to the completion, the sub-lessee was not liable to indemnify his lessor (Surtees v. Woodhouse, [1903] 1 K. B. 396; 67 J. P. 232). This decision was followed by the Court of Appeal in Lumby v. Faupel (1904), 90 L. T. 140; 68 J. P. 265.

The subject-matter of a tenancy was a cottage and yard adjoining a wharf, and the rent was £20. The lease contained a covenant to pay "all rates, taxes, assessments and outgoings of every description, payable in respect of the premises during the tenancy," and the tenants covenanted to keep the demised premises in tenantable repair during the tenancy. The tenants had held the premises for over ten years. FARWELL, J., held that a supply of water to a water-closet required by the sanitary authority under the P. H. (London) A., 1891, was, and that the paving and draining of a yard and repairs to drains required by such authority under the said Act were not, within the reasonable contemplation of the parties to the demise (Valpy v. St. Leonard's Wharf Co., Ltd. (1903), 1 L. G. R. 305; 67 J. P. 402).

An agreement for a three years' tenancy at a rent of £55 per annum, contained covenants by the tenant to pay "all taxes, rates, assessments, and outgoings of every description for the time being payable in respect of the premises as they become due." During the tenancy the landlord was compelled by the local authority to spend £83 10*s.* in relaying defective drains on the premises. WRIGHT, J., held, distinguishing Valpy v. St. Leonard's Wharf Co., supra, that he could recover the amount from the tenant under his covenant; the fact that the tenancy was one for three years only was no sufficient reason for limiting the words "outgoings payable in respect of the premises," and not construing them in their ordinary sense (Stockdale v. Ascherberg, [1903] 1 K. B. 873; 67 J. P. 435; affirmed, [1904] 1 K. B. 447; 68 J. P. 241). See, however, Henman v. Berliner, post, p. 202.

By an agreement for a lease of a house in London for a term of three years at the "clear yearly rent" of £54, to be paid free and clear of all deductions whatsoever (property tax only excepted), the tenant agreed to pay and discharge "all rates, taxes, assessments, and impositions whatsoever, whether parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, that may become due or assessed in respect of the messuage, premises, and garden during the tenancy (property tax excepted as aforesaid), and to keep the premises in as good repair as at the commencement of the tenancy, fair wear and tear excepted." During the term notices were served upon the landlord and the tenant, by the sanitary authority, stating that the premises were in such a state as to be a nuisance, and requiring specified sanitary work to be executed. The tenant executed the work at a cost of £118, and claimed to recover this sum from the landlord. It was held, applying Foulger v. Arding, ante, p. 199, and Stockdale v. Ascherberg, supra, that the expense was an imposition within the meaning of the agreement, which fell on the tenant, notwithstanding the absence of such words as "imposed on the landlord or tenant," and notwithstanding the shortness of the tenancy (In re Warriner, Brayshaw v. Ninnis, [1903] 2 Ch. 367; 67 J. P. 351).

A tenant occupied a house for three years at a yearly rent of £70 under an agreement by him to pay all "rates, taxes, assessments, and outgoings whatsoever, in respect of the said premises." He held over on the expiration of the term without any fresh agreement, and paid rent at the same rate. WRIGHT, J., held, applying Valpy v. St. Leonard's Wharf Co., Ltd., supra, that whilst so holding over he could not be liable for an expense of £70 incurred by his landlord in executing structural sanitary repairs; having regard to the relative amounts of the rent and expenditure, he could not be presumed to have become a yearly tenant subject to so onerous an obligation (Harris v. Hickman, [1904] 1 K. B. 13; 68 J. P. 65).

A lease of premises used as a bakehouse contained a covenant by the lessee to pay "all existing and future . . . impositions and outgoings of every description for the time being payable either by landlord or tenant in respect of the premises." It was held that the covenant imposed upon the lessee liability for the expense of making structural alterations necessary in order to obtain the certificate of the district council for the use of the premises as an underground bakehouse (Goldstein v. Hollingsworth, [1904] 2 K. B. 578; 68 J. P. 383). The same result followed where the covenant was "to pay all existing and future taxes, rates, assessments, and outgoings, whether parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise, for the time being payable either by the landlord or tenant in respect of the said premises" (Morris v. Beal, [1904] 2 K. B. 585; 68 J. P. 542). In Stuckey v. Hooke (1905), 3 L. G. R. 633; 69 J. P. 119, WARRINGTON, J., gave similar effect to a covenant to "bear, pay, and discharge all burdens, duties, assessments, outgoings, and impositions whatsoever, at any time during the said term charged, assessed, or imposed on the said premises, or upon the landlord or tenant in respect thereof." The decision was reversed on appeal on the ground that in such cases the High Court has no jurisdiction by reason of the wording of the statute in question; but see a dictum of FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J. ([1906] 2 K. B. 20; 70 J. P. 393). See also Horner v. Franklin, [1905] 1 K. B. 479; 69 J. P. 117, where, however, the Court of Appeal expressed no opinion as to whether the expenses there in question were an "outgoing" within the lessees' covenant. See also Monro v. Lord Burghclere, [1918] 1 K. B. 291; 82 J. P. 86, where the judgments in Horner v. Franklin and Stuckey v. Hooke were followed in a case decided under the London Building Acts (Amendment) Act, 1905, s. 20.

By a lease dated 1894, plaintiff demised premises to defendants for twenty-one years, at an annual rent of £105 16*s*., clear of all deductions (except property tax), and the defendants covenanted to pay the rent reserved, and "all rates, taxes, and outgoings now payable, or hereafter becoming payable, in respect of the said premises." The lease also contained a repairing covenant. It was held by the King's Bench Division that the defendants were liable for the cost of paving works under s. 150, post, p. 286 (Greaves v. Whitmarsh, Watson & Co., Ltd., [1906] 2 K. B. 340; 70 J. P. 415). It was said by the court in the last-mentioned case that no distinction could be drawn between the cost of making up a street and the cost of sanitary work.

A tenant covenanted to pay "all rates, taxes, assessments, charges, and outgoings imposed or charged on the premises or the landlord or tenant in respect thereof," and the landlord covenanted to "keep the exterior of the said dwelling-house and buildings in repair." During the tenancy the local authority required certain work to be done in connection with the outside drainage of the house, and eventually an order was made by justices calling upon the landlord to do the work. The work involved, in order to comply with the authority's requirements, a certain amount of reconstruction and improvement of the existing system, as well as repair. The landlord paid for the work, and in respect of that portion of it which related to reconstruction and improvement he claimed to be recouped by the defendant on the ground that the expense was an "outgoing." It was held that the landlord's obligation under his covenant included the obligation to keep the outside drain in repair, and that the expense of executing the whole of the work fell upon him, as he could not legally perform his covenant without effecting a certain amount of reconstruction and repair (Howe v. Botwood, [1913] 2 K. B. 387).

In Henman v. Berliner, [1918] 2 K. B. 236; 82 J. P. 300, it was held that where the landlord had undertaken to put drains into proper condition and had failed to do so she could not recover the cost of reconstructing the drains (in compliance with a notice from the Local Authority) under covenant by the tenant to pay outgoings and keep in repair.

Covenants to "repair and maintain."

If a house is of such a kind that by its own inherent nature it will in course of time fall into a particular condition, the effects of that result are not within the tenant's covenant to repair. A lease contained a covenant to "substantially and effectually repair, uphold and maintain," and to deliver up the premises in a condition in accordance with such covenant. The London County Council gave the lessee a "dangerous structure notice" in reference to a bay window, and the lessee took such window down, and put in a new window flush with the main wall, thereupon the landlord brought an action to compel him to replace the bay window. The judge found that, owing to the inherent nature of the premises, the bay window could not have been made to comply with the council's requirements, without building a practically new window, and supporting it on columns of some kind, and he gave judgment for the defendant:—Held, on appeal, that the defendant was not liable (Wright v. Lawson (1904), 19 T. L. R. 510; 68 J. P. 34).

A road was in 1888 widened and made up by two frontagers under an agreement, whereby M. was not "to be under any liability to contribute to the maintenance or repair of the said roadway and sewers and main-drain, or any works connected therewith; but the same were to be wholly and solely maintained by T., unless and until the same should be taken to by the parish or some other local or public authority." In 1901 the local authority made up the road, or street, and apportioned on M. as a frontager the sum of £108:—Held, that the agreement did not apply to the works executed by the authority, and that M. could not recover the £108 from T. (Moore v. Todd (1903), 19 T. L. R. 642; 68 J. P. 43).

Note to Section 104.

A covenant to contribute a proportionate part of the expenses of repairing and maintaining a road until undertaken by the local authority, does not extend to contributing a proportion of the expense of an entire reconstruction of the road. In construing such a covenant, regard must be had to the standard of condition of the road at the time when the covenant was entered into, and the obligation is to contribute a proportionate part of the expense of putting it into a state of repair corresponding to the standard contemplated or existing at that time. Where the road is reconstructed for the purpose of its being taken over by the authority, the covenantor is liable to contribute a proportionate part of such expenses as would have been incurred in putting it into the state of repair above mentioned, but is not liable to contribute to the expenses of such work as amounts to reconstruction (Scott v. Brown (1904), 4 L. G. R. 103; 69 J. P. 89).

See also Chelsham, etc. Association, Ltd. v. Hayward (1912), 76 J. P. 52, a county court decision as to the assignability and enforcement of mutual covenants to repair a road entered into by a vendor and different purchasers from him.

Recovery of money paid under compulsion—

We may here conveniently consider the numerous decisions in cases where actions have been brought by owners against tenants, or vice versâ, or by owners or occupiers against local authorities in order to recover the expense of executing works which the defendants ought to have done themselves, and might have been compelled to do. These decisions, it will be found, turn upon the point whether the work executed was in fact done under compulsion or voluntarily, for the principle of law applicable to such actions is that a person who executes under compulsion work which another is legally compellable to do has a right of action for the expenses incurred by him against such other person.

Decisions under the P. H. (London) A., 1891.

Most of the cases have been decided under the P. H. (London) A., 1891, and before referring to them we will set out shortly the effect of the sections of that Act relevant to the matter we are discussing. Section 3 provides that an authority must give such directions to their officers as will secure the existence of any nuisance being immediately brought to the notice of any person who may be required to abate it, and the officers shall do so by serving a written "intimation"; s. 4 (1) provides for the service by the authority of an "abatement notice" upon the person responsible for the nuisance, or the owner or occupier, requiring abatement thereof; s. 4 (3) requires such last-mentioned notice to be served on the owner when the nuisance is due to a structural defect; s. 4 (4) imposes a penalty for non-compliance with a notice served under s. 4; s. 5 provides for the making of an abatement order by justices upon complaint if the abatement notice is not complied with; and, lastly, s. 11 (1) enacts that all expenses incurred in serving the notice, making the complaint, or obtaining or carrying into effect the justices' order, shall be deemed to be money paid at the request of the person on whom the order is made, or (if no order is made) then of the person by whose act or default the nuisance was caused. The first case decided under the London Act was Gebhardt v. Saunders, [1892] 2 Q. B. 452; 56 J. P. 741. The plaintiff was tenant to the defendants of a house, in which a nuisance arose from an accumulation of sewage in the cellar. The authority served at the premises a notice under s. 4 (1) addressed to "the owner or occupier," and the plaintiff did the necessary work; in the course of the work it appeared that the nuisance arose from a structural defect, but no notice had been served on the defendants, as ought to have been done under s. 4 (3), if this fact had been known beforehand. It was held by the Divisional Court that as the plaintiff would have been liable to a penalty under s. 4 (4), had he not obeyed the notice, he must be regarded as having done the work under compulsion, and that he could recover against the defendants under the words of s. 11 (1), "expenses incurred . . . in carrying the order into effect," on the ground that the word "order" was wide enough to include a notice involving a penalty for disobedience. CHARLES, J., also held that the defendants were liable, apart from s. 11, upon the common law principle already referred to, the fact that the nuisance arose from a structural defect rendering the defendants legally compellable to abate it, although such fact was not apparent in time to serve a notice under s. 4 (3). See also a similar decision under the Metropolis Management Acts (Castleberg v. Kenyon, Times, June 16th, 1879). In the next case under the P. H. (London) A., 1891, the sanitary authority had served on certain premises an "intimation" notice, addressed to the owners, that if certain necessary works were not completed within a specified time they would commence proceedings against them by the service of an "abatement" notice. Thereupon the occupier, without forwarding the document to the owners, or informing them of it, caused the work to be executed, and then sought to recover the amount expended thereon from the owners:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the occupiers, not being compellable to execute the work, had acted as mere volunteers in doing so, and had no claim to be reimbursed by the owners (Thompson and Norris Manufacturing Co. v. Hawes (1895), 73 L. T. 369; 59 J. P. 580).

In the next case which arose under the London Act, an "abatement" notice had been served, in consequence of which, and without waiting for an order to be made on it, the person primâ facie liable to abate the nuisance executed the work required, and it was afterwards discovered that he was not legally liable to do so, but that the sanitary authority were. It was held, following Gebhardt's Case on both points, that he was entitled to be recouped the expenses he had been put to through their default at common law and also by virtue of s. 11 (1) of the Act (Andrew v. St. Olave's Board of Works, [1898] 1 Q. B. 775; 62 J. P. 328). Since the last-mentioned decision under the London Act, the compulsory nature of a notice under s. 4 has not been again disputed; but there have been decisions as to the effect of an "intimation" notice under s. 3. In Proctor v. Islington Borough Council (1903), 67 J. P. 164, and Silles v. Fulham Borough Council, [1903] 1 K. B. 829; 67 J. P. 273, the authorities had served notices headed "Intimation," and signed by a sanitary inspector, requiring certain work to be done to a "drain," and threatening that, in default, the authority "may commence proceedings against you by the service of a statutory notice." The work was done, but, finding that the so-called "drain" was in fact a "sewer," the recipients of the notices claimed to recover the expenses incurred by them from the authority. In each case WRIGHT, J., held that the notice being one under s. 3 did not amount to compulsion. In Silles' Case there was no appeal upon this point, and in Proctor's Case, though the plaintiff appealed, no decision was given. The court obtained the consent of both parties to their dealing with the matter informally, and they made an award in favour of the plaintiff.

In a later case a sanitary inspector served upon the owners of a house an "intimation" under s. 3, that the house was in such a state as to be a nuisance owing to the drain being defective. The owners called upon the tenant to do the work, it being alleged that he was liable under a covenant to pay expenses of this nature. The tenant refused to do the work, and the owners therefore did it without waiting to be served with a notice under s. 4. It was held that an action could not be maintained against the tenant to recover the expense on the ground that the work was done voluntarily and not under compulsion (Harris v. Hickman, [1904] 1 K. B. 13; 68 J. P. 65). In a still later case a Divisional Court held with regret that they must regard a notice under s. 3 as not amounting to sufficient compulsion to entitle the plaintiff to recover from the authority the money expended by him in repairing what proved to be a sewer. The learned judges would have decided otherwise, but for Thompson and Norris Manufacturing Co. v. Hawes, supra (Oliver v. Camberwell Borough Council (1904), 90 L. T. 285; 68 J. P. 165). The last-mentioned case was observed upon in Wilson's Music, etc. Co. v. Finsbury Borough Council, [1908] 1 K. B. 563; 72 J. P. 37, where CHANNELL, J., decided that where an "intimation" notice is complied with under protest the money expended can be recovered.

Decisions under the P. H. A., 1875.

We will now refer to decisions under the P. H. A., 1875. In the earliest case it was held that when a person is called upon by a sanitary authority to abate, and does abate, a nuisance by doing work which the authority themselves are liable to do, and where that person afterwards seeks to recover from them the cost of the work, upon the principle that, where one person is compelled to do work which another is legally compellable to do, the cost of the work may be recovered by the one as money paid at the other's request, regard must be had to the fact that in the case of a nuisance prompt action by someone is imperative; and that because of that fact it is not necessary to show that there was actual, direct, or irresistible compulsion in order to bring the case within the principle above enunciated. It is sufficient to show that the authority took steps which practically amounted to compulsion (North v. Walthamstow U. D. C. (1898), 67 L. J. Q. B. 972; 62 J. P. 836). In this case there was no statutory notice under s. 94 of the Act, but there was a peremptorily worded notice, signed by the inspector of nuisances, requiring drains to be repaired within seven days.

The owner of a house, who was enlarging his premises, was required by the authority's surveyor (amongst other things) to take up and relay the back "drain" of the house (which was in fact "a sewer") and to construct an interception chamber or manhole; and these works the owner, upon being told that they must be done, though no actual steps were taken to enforce their execution, agreed to do under protest, and did do under the direction and by order of the surveyor, but without any legal proceedings being taken against him, and without serious threat of such proceedings. The liability in law for carrying out these works rested on the authority. In an action by the owner to recover the costs of the works from the authority, on the ground that he was compelled by them to do works which they were compellable by law to do:—Held, that the owner in the execution of these works was acting as a volunteer and not under compulsion, and was therefore not entitled to recover, although without legal proceedings or the threat of such, there may be sufficient compulsion to prevent a person being regarded as a volunteer (Ellis v. Bromley R. D. C. (1899), 81 L. T. 224; 63 J. P. 711).

A nuisance arose from an obstruction in a pipe near a house, and the authority served on the owner of the house a notice under s. 94 requiring her to abate the nuisance and to relay the drain. She, although protesting that the pipe was a sewer, did the work, and afterwards sued the authority:—Held, by CHANNELL, J., following his own decision in North v. Walthamstow U. D. C., supra, that the expense of the work done to the sewer was money paid under compulsion, and that the owner was entitled to recover it from the authority (Haedicke v. Friern Barnet U. D. C., [1904] 2 K. B. 807; 68 J. P. 473, reversed on appeal on another ground, [1905] 1 K. B. 110; 69 J. P. 45. See also Wilson's Music, etc. Co. v. Finsbury Borough Council, ante, p. 204). In the last-mentioned cases, CHANNELL, J., expressed the view that less evidence of compulsion is required when a local authority is being sued than is required when a landlord sues his tenant, or vice versâ. See a careful review of the above cases in Hackett v. Smith, [1917] 2 I. R. 508.

In Wareham and Dale, Ltd. v. Fyffe (1910), 8 L. G. R. 620; 74 J. P. 249, tenants who had been called upon by a nuisance notice from the sanitary authority to make some structural alterations in the drainage system, and had done the work, after in vain requesting the "owners" to do so, recovered the cost from the owners.

Notices were served by a local authority under the P. H. A., 1875, and under certain local Acts on the appellant and on the respondent, who were the owners of two adjoining houses, requiring them to abate a nuisance arising from the drains on their premises and to perform certain necessary works. The drainage of the respondent's house passed through the appellant's drain into a sewer. The appellant complied with the terms of his notice, but the respondent took no steps:—Held, that neither under s. 104 of the P. H. A., 1875, nor at common law had the appellant any right of contribution as against the respondent (Reeve v. Sadler (1903), 88 L. T. 95; 67 J. P. 63. Cf., also Nathan v. Rouse, on p. 179, ante).

Power to individual to complain to justice of nuisance.

105. Complaint may be made to a justice of the existence of a nuisance under this Act on any premises within the district of any local authority by any person aggrieved thereby (a), or by any inhabitant of such district, or by any owner of premises (b) within such district, and thereupon the like proceedings (c) shall be had with the like incidents and consequences as to making of orders, penalties for disobedience of orders, appeal, and otherwise, as in the case of a complaint relating to a nuisance made to a justice by the local authority (d):

Provided that the court may, if it thinks fit, adjourn the hearing or further hearing of the summons for an examination of the premises where the nuisance is alleged to exist, and may authorise (e) the entry into such premises of any constable or other person for the purposes of such examination;

Provided also, that the court may authorise any constable or other person to do all necessary acts for executing an order made under this section, and to recover the expenses from the person on whom the order is made in a summary manner (f).

Any constable or other person authorised under this section shall have the like powers and be subject to the like restrictions as if he were an officer of the local authority authorised under the provisions of this Act relating to nuisances to enter any premises and do any acts thereon (g).

(a) These words extend the provision of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, s. 13, since the nuisance complained of, which was there limited to private premises, is now described generally, and may exist on any premises. But while the section enables any person aggrieved by a nuisance to take proceedings for its abatement, yet the effect of the section is not to impose a statutory duty on the owner of premises to keep them in a sanitary condition, or so as not to be a nuisance, so as to enable the tenant to counterclaim damages for breach of such duty in an action for rent (Hildige v. O'Farrell (1880), 6 L. R. Ir. 493).

In Hilton v. Hopwood (1899), 44 Sol. J. 90, the respondent deposed that she resided at H. Cottage, and that she was aggrieved by smoke coming from the R. factory chimneys, which damaged the shrubs and vegetation of her property, but she was unable to say that she was aggrieved on either of the dates mentioned in the summonses, or that the smoke from the chimneys, in fact, reached her on those dates. The distance from H. Cottage to R. was nearly six miles. The justices made an order on the appellants prohibiting the recurrence of the nuisance. On appeal, RIDLEY, J., was of opinion that the complainant in proceeding under s. 105 must show that she was aggrieved by the nuisance which took place on the date mentioned in the summons. DARLING, J., said that the complainant's argument amounted to this, that because before May 23rd she was a person aggrieved, she was a "person aggrieved" on that date, though, in point of fact, it was someone else who was aggrieved. He declined to hold that the legislature had created a status whereby persons who were once aggrieved were always aggrieved.

(b) As to "premises" and "owner," see definitions in s. 4, ante, pp. 7, 8.

(c) By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 12, a local authority might cause complaint to be made of a nuisance, and justices might order it to be abated. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, s. 13, on complaint by an inhabitant, a justice might act as if the person complaining were such authority. By 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, Part II. (ss. 14—34) of that Act was to be construed as one with the above statutes; and by s. 21, the nuisance authority were required, previous to taking proceedings under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 12, to serve a notice on the person by whose acts the nuisance arose, to abate the same within a time specified. It was held that notice was not a necessary preliminary to a complaint by an inhabitant (Cocker v. Cardwell (1869), L. R. 5 Q. B. 15; 34 J. P. 516). Per COCKBURN, L.C.J.: "If the sections had occurred in the same order in one and the same statute, it clearly could not have been said that the last section applied to a private individual when all mention of him was omitted." It would appear, therefore, that an individual need not give notice before proceeding under this section. A person aggrieved may, under this section, make a complaint against a local authority as well as against an individual; but the section does not give justices jurisdiction to entertain a complaint in respect of a nuisance caused by an authority's sewage works (see R. v. Parlby, on p. 166, ante).

(d) These incidents and consequences appear in the previous sections.

(e) This authority must be given by an order of the court. See s. 102, ante, p. 188.

(f) See s. 251, post. It is presumed that the authority to the constable will be contained in the order.

(g) See s. 102, ante, p. 188.

police to proceed in certain cases against nuisances.

in relation to nuisances under this Act, the Local Government Board may authorise any officer of police acting within the district of the defaulting authority to institute any proceeding which the defaulting authority might institute with respect to such nuisances, and such officer may recover in a summary manner (b) or in any county or superior court any expenses incurred by him, and not paid by the person proceeded against, from the defaulting authority:

But such officer of police shall not be at liberty to enter any house or part of a house used as the dwelling of any person without such person's consent, or without the warrant of a justice (c), for the purpose of carrying into effect this enactment.

(a) The M. of H. are not likely to proceed under this section unless the circumstances are very exceptional and they are satisfied that the authority have generally neglected their duty in the matter of nuisances. The L. G. B. once pointed out that no action which they could take as regards a particular nuisance would bring the case before any other tribunal than that before which it would come if the person aggrieved were himself to institute proceedings under s. 105. As to the application of s. 299 to such cases, see the notes to that section.

(b) See s. 251, post, and as to the courts referred to, see s. 104, note (f), ante, p. 191.

(c) See s. 102, ante, p. 188, and the preceding section.

Local authority may take proceedings in superior court for abatement of nuisances.

107. Any local authority may, if in their opinion summary proceedings would afford an inadequate remedy, cause any proceedings to be taken against any person in any superior court of law or equity (a) to enforce the abatement or prohibition of any nuisance under this Act (b), or for the recovery of any penalties from or for the punishment of any persons offending against the provisions of this Act relating to nuisances, and may order the expenses of and incident to all such proceedings to be paid out of the fund or rate applicable by them to the general purposes of this Act (c).

When the Attorney-General must be a party.

(a) Now in the High Court of Justice. As to the various legal remedies for a nuisance, see s. 111, post, p. 210, and the notes thereto. Proceedings under this section for the abatement or prohibition of a public nuisance must be taken in the name of the Attorney-General unless some proprietary right of the local authority has been interfered with (Wallasey L. B. v. Gracey (1887), 36 Ch. D. 593; 51 J. P. 740; Tottenham U. D. C. v. Williamson, [1896] 2 Q. B. 353; 60 J. P. 725). See also Stoke Parish Council v. Price, [1899] 2 Ch. 277; 63 J. P. 502; Mayor of Devonport v. Tozer, [1903] 1 Ch. 759; 67 J. P. 269; and Att.-Gen. v. Ashbourne Recreation Ground, [1903] 1 Ch. 101; 67 J. P. 73.

Where a nuisance affects property of which they are the owners, an authority, in addition to the right of acting as relators in an action by the Attorney-General, may themselves maintain an action for damages (Att.-Gen. v. Logan, [1891] 2 Q. B. 100; 55 J. P. 615). In Boyce v. Paddington Borough Council, [1903] 1 Ch. 109; 67 J. P. 23, BUCKLEY, J., laid down the following propositions: "A plaintiff can sue without joining the Attorney-General in two cases: first, where the interference with the public right is such as that some private right of his is at the same time interfered with . . .; and, secondly, where no private right is interfered with, but the plaintiff, in respect of his public right, suffers special damage, peculiar to himself, from the interference with the public right." The actual decision was reversed, [1903] 2 Ch. 556; 68 J. P. 49, the Court of Appeal holding on the facts that the rights of the public were involved, and that the Attorney-General must be joined, but the above propositions were not questioned; nor were they discussed in the House of Lords where the original decision was restored (Paddington Borough Council v. Att.-Gen., [1906] A. C. 1; 70 J. P. 41). See also Sheringham U. D. C. v. Holsey (1904), 91 L. T. 225; 68 J. P. 394; Wednesbury Corporation v. Lodge Holes Colliery Co., Ltd., [1907] 1 K. B. 78; 71 J. P. 73; reversed, [1908] A. C. 323; 72 J. P. 417; Cavan C. C. v. Kane, [1910] 2 I. R. 644; [1913] 2 I. R. 250; and Att.-Gen. v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co., infra. It has been said, however, that the Attorney-General represents the public as a whole, and not small portions thereof; thus, in the case of rights vested in a parish council, it was held that such council was a necessary party (Att.-Gen. and Spalding R. D. C. v. Garner, [1907] 2 K. B. 480; 71 J. P. 357; but see hereon, Weir v. Fermanagh C. C., [1913], 1 I. R. 63, 193).

Where an action to which the Attorney-General is a necessary party has been launched without him, see, as to the terms upon which he will afterwards be added as co-plaintiff, Att.-Gen. v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co., [1908] 1 Ch. 388; 72 J. P. 48. The jurisdiction of the Attorney-General to decide in what cases it is proper for him to sue on behalf of relators is absolute (London C. C. v. Att.-Gen., [1902] A. C. 165; 66 J. P. 340).

As to the procedure for obtaining the fiat of the Attorney-General, see Garrett on Nuisances, 2nd ed., pp. 360—362; Daniell's Chancery Forms, 5th ed., by Burney, p. 33. There is jurisdiction under R. S. C., Order XXXVI., to order the transfer of an action ex relatione from the Chancery to the King's Bench Division, even where according to the usual practice of the Attorney-General, the choice of the division in which the action was originally brought was left entirely to the relator and co-plaintiff. And the co-plaintiff cannot assert the prerogative of the Crown to choose its own tribunal (Att.-Gen. v. Wilson (1900), 70 L. J. Ch. 234; 83 L. T. 646).

When injunctions will be granted.

In a case where it was found that a nuisance had existed at the date of the writ, but had since been remedied, SWINFEN EADY, J., held that it would not be proper to grant an injunction, nor even to give liberty to apply for one in the same action, because any future nuisance would require to be proved, and that could as well be done in a fresh action (Att.-Gen. v. Squires & Sons (1906), 70 J. P. N. 545; cf. Att.-Gen. v. Keymer Brick Co. (1903), 1 L. G. R. 654; 67 J. P. 434). See, however, Chester (Dean and Chapter of) v. Smelting Corporation (1901), 85 L. T. 67; 18 T. L. R. 743, where FARWELL, J., said that "it is almost a matter of course for an injunction to be granted when damage has been proved"; and Dams v. Locke-King, Times, May 23rd, 1908, where PARKER, J., said that his view had always been that if there was no reasonable probability of a nuisance being continued, the court would not grant an injunction but that, otherwise, abatement of a nuisance was not an answer. See also Att.-Gen. v. Dorin, [1912] 1 Ch. 369; 76 J. P. 181, where an injunction was refused, the defendant having expressly disclaimed any intention to do the act originally contemplated; and cases cited on p. 65, ante, as to the discretion of the court when the Attorney-General claims an injunction to restrain a breach of a statutory provision. An injunction will not be granted when the injury complained of is trivial (Llandudno U. D. C. v. Woods, [1899] 2 Ch. 705; 63 J. P. 775; Behrens v. Richards, [1905] 2 Ch. 614; 69 J. P. 381).

For a case in which an injunction was suspended during the war, see Gt. Cent. Ry. v. Doncaster R. D. C., 87 L. J. Ch. 80; 82 J. P. 38.

Section limited to nuisances "under this Act."

(b) It must be noticed that the local authority is not empowered by this section to institute proceedings in the case of any nuisance not the subject of this Act, and though such authority might like any other corporate body prosecute indictments for common law nuisances, there would be a great question whether they could charge the expenses on their rates or funds. See, however, the judgment of WILLS, J., in R. v. Parlby, ante, p. 166. And, of course, an authority may sue to protect their own property from the effects of any public nuisance. See note (a), supra.

18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 30, confined this power to nuisances within the area of the jurisdiction of the local authority, but this restriction is removed by the text. And see the next section.

arises without district.

This section shall extend to the metropolis so far as to authorise proceedings to be taken under it by any nuisance authority (d) in the metropolis in respect of any nuisance within the area of their jurisdiction caused by an act or default committed or taking place within the district of a local authority under this Act; or by any such local authority in respect of any nuisance within their district caused by an act or default committed or taking place within the jurisdiction of any such nuisance authority (d).

(a) The reference is to s. 91, ante, p. 165, and perhaps also to s. 114, post, p. 215.

(b) This clause removes the difficulty disclosed in R. v. Cotton (1858), 1 El. & El. 203; 23 J. P. 532. There brewers in the parish of R. poured refuse into a river in that parish, thereby creating a nuisance in the same river in the parish of D. It was held that the local authority in D., whose jurisdiction did not include R., could not legally complain, and that the justices could make no order.

(c) See ss. 91—103, ante, pp. 165–189. See as to the jurisdiction of the justices in detached parts of counties, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 7.

(d) By the P. H. (London) A., 1891, s. 14:

Application of section to metropolis.

"(1) Where a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily under this Act appears to be wholly or partially caused by some act, default, or sufferance committed or taking place without the district the inhabitants of which are affected by the nuisance, the sanitary authority for that district may take or cause to be taken against any person in respect of such act, default, or sufferance any proceedings in relation to nuisances by this Act authorised, with the same incidents and consequences as if such act, default, or sufferance were committed or took place wholly within their district; so, however, that summary proceedings shall in no case be taken otherwise than before a court having jurisdiction in the district where the act, default, or sufferance is alleged to be committed or take place.

"(2) Section one hundred and eight of the Public Health Act, 1875, set out in the First Schedule to this Act, shall continue to extend to London, with the substitution of a sanitary authority under this Act for any nuisance authority mentioned in the said section, and any reference in that section to a nuisance in the metropolis shall include a nuisance within the meaning of this Act."

Section 108 originally concluded with a definition of "nuisance authority," but this was rendered unnecessary by s. 14 (2) of the London Act, supra, and was accordingly repealed by that Act.

The sanitary authorities in the metropolis are, in the city, the court of common council, and, elsewhere, the metropolitan borough councils. See the provisions of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, s. 99 (1), as amended by the City of London Sewers Act, 1897, and the London Government Act, 1899.

109. Where two convictions against the provisions of any Act relating to the overcrowding of a house (a) have taken place within a period of three months (whether the persons convicted were or were not the same) a court of summary jurisdiction (b) may on the application of the local authority of the district in which the house is situated direct (c) the closing of the house for such period as the court may deem necessary.

Provision in case of two convictions for overcrowding

Note to Section 109.

(a) See s. 91, ante, p. 165.

(b) See the definition, ante, p. 36.

(c) It is not stated how the direction is to be given. But it is presumed that the court must make an order, and for this purpose there must be a proper complaint, and the party complained of must be duly summoned and heard on his defence, unless, indeed, the section means that the court can direct the closing of the house as part of the adjudication on the second information. The words, however, hardly support this construction. The provision is discretionary upon the court.

Provision as to ships.

110. For the purpose of the provisions of this Act relating to nuisances (a), any ship or vessel lying in any river harbour or other water within the district of a local authority shall be subject to the jurisdiction of that authority in the same manner as if it were a house within such district; and any ship or vessel lying in any river harbour or other water not within the district of a local authority shall be deemed to be within the district of such local authority as may be prescribed by the Local Government Board (b), and where no local authority has been prescribed, then of the local authority whose district nearest adjoins the place where such ship or vessel is lying.

The master or other officer in charge of any such ship or vessel shall be deemed for the purpose of the said provisions to be the occupier of such ship or vessel.

This section shall not apply to any ship or vessel under the command or charge (c) of any officer bearing her Majesty's commission, or to any ship or vessel belonging to any foreign Government.

(a) See s. 91, ante, p. 165. For the provisions as to canal boats used as dwellings, see 40 & 41 Vict. c. 60, and 47 & 48 Vict. c. 75, in App. I., post, Vol. II. By the Public Health (Ships) Act, 1885, post, the above section is to have effect, not only for the purpose of the provisions of this Act relating to nuisances, but also for the purposes of such of the provisions of this Act relating to infectious diseases as are referred to in the Schedule of the Act of 1885, i.e., the provisions contained in the following sections of this Act—120, 121, 124, 125, 126, 128, 131, 132 and 133.

(b) The L. G. B. prescribed this by order in several cases. There is some difficulty as to the distance out at sea. It has been considered that three miles from the shore is the proper limit, if indeed the water herein mentioned applies to the sea which, it has been contended, should have been mentioned specifically, as it is in s. 130, post, p. 237. See the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878, which makes foreigners on board foreign ships, passing within three miles of the English coast, subject to the English criminal law.

As to the jurisdiction of a port sanitary authority, see s. 288, post.

(c) These words are in addition to the terms used in the repealed Act, and prevent the exemption from operating in respect of Government vessels lent to public bodies for special purposes.

Provisions of Act relating to nuisances not to affect other remedies.

111. The provisions of this Act relating to nuisances shall be deemed to be in addition to and not to abridge or affect any right remedy or proceeding under any other provisions of this Act or under any other Act, or at law or in equity (a):

Provided that no person shall be punished (b) for the same offence both under the provisions of this Act relating to nuisances, and under any other law or enactment.

(a) See also ss. 340 and 341, post.

Ordinary remedies for nuisance

A public or common nuisance is an offence against the public, being either the doing of a thing to the annoyance of all the King's subjects, or the neglecting to do a thing which the common good requires: 1 Hawk. P. C., ch. 32, s. 4. The usual remedy for a public nuisance is by indictment; it is a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment or both. Whenever special or particular damage is sustained by an individual from a public nuisance, an action for damages is maintainable, provided that the damage is direct and substantial (Addison on Torts, p. 10; Soltau v. De Held (1851), 21 L. J. Ch. 153; Benjamin v. Storr (1874), L. R. 9 C. P. 400). An injunction may also be obtained to restrain the continuance of a public nuisance (see Att.-Gen. v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co., [1900] 1 Q. B. 78; 63 J. P. 772); but the Attorney-General must be a party to the proceedings unless the plaintiff has sustained special damage (Soltau v. De Held, supra; Att.-Gen. v. Shrewsbury Bridge Co. (1882), 51 L. J. Ch. 746; 46 L. T. 687; Campbell v. Paddington Corporation, [1911] 1 K. B. 869; 75 J. P. 277; Tottenham U. D. C. v. Williamson, [1896] 2 Q. B. 353; 60 J. P. 725; and other cases in notes to s. 107, ante, p. 207; and see Daniell's Chancery Practice, 7th ed., pp. 1338 et seq.). For a private nuisance the remedy is by an action for an injunction or for damages or both. "To constitute a public nuisance, the thing must be such as in its nature or in its consequences is a nuisance—an injury or a damage to all persons who come within the sphere of its operation, although it may be so in a greater degree to some than it is to others. For example, take the case of the operations of a manufactory, in the course of which operations volumes of noxious smoke or of poisonous effluvia are emitted. To all persons who are at all within the reach of these operations, it is more or less a nuisance in the popular sense of the term. It is true that to those who are nearer to it it may be a greater nuisance, a greater inconvenience than it is to those who are more remote from it; but still, to all who are at all within reach of it, it is more or less a nuisance or inconvenience" (per KINDERSLEY, V.-C., in Soltau v. De Held, supra).

Note to Section 111.

(b) Proceedings taken under the previous sections to procure proper privy accommodation or the removal of refuse, would not be considered as punishment. In R. v. Wigg (1705), Salk. 460, it was held that a statutory provision which enabled swine kept in the streets of London to be seized and sold, did not prevent a party from being indicted for a common nuisance in so keeping them.

"Punished."

OFFENSIVE TRADES.

112. Any person who, after the passing of this Act (a), establishes within the district of an urban authority (b), without their consent in writing (c), any offensive trade (d); that is to say, the trade of—

Blood boiler, or Bone boiler, or Fellmonger, or Soap boiler, or Tallow melter, or Tripe boiler, or Any other noxious or offensive trade business or manufacture (e), shall be liable to a penalty (f) not exceeding fifty pounds in respect of the establishment thereof, and any person carrying on a business so established shall be liable to a penalty (f) not exceeding forty shillings for every day on which the offence is continued, whether there has or has not been any conviction in respect of the establishment thereof.

Restriction on establishment of offensive trade in urban district.

(a) The P. H. A., 1848, s. 64, made similar provision for such businesses established after the date when that Act became applicable to any particular district; probably, therefore, few such businesses now exist in old urban districts without such consent.

Effect of section.

(b) This and the three following sections with regard to offensive trades are only applied by the Act to urban districts. If a rural council desire to be invested with these powers they must apply to the M. of H. for the necessary order under s. 276.

Rural districts.

Note to Section 112.

As it is not the practice of the Ministry under ordinary circumstances to declare the provisions to be in force throughout a rural district, the application should be confined to the particular parish or parishes in which offensive trades have been or are likely to be established. See also note (d) to s. 113.

In the case of a rural district or parish becoming subject to these provisions in pursuance of an order under s. 276 the date of the operation of the order will presumably be the date of the "passing of this Act" for the purposes of the section.

Consent

(c) This Act does not, as the P. H. A., 1848, did, prescribe how the consent should be given. The local authority should pass a resolution, and notice thereof should be given to the applicant for consent. An appropriate form will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 478.

Sanction to carry on an offensive trade was granted by a Scotch local authority subject to a certain condition. The traders afterwards brought an action to have it declared that the condition was ultra vires, and that the sanction was as valid as if the condition had not been inserted. It was held that, whether the insertion of the condition was or was not ultra vires, the action was incompetent, the condition being an inseparable part of the sanction as granted by the authority which alone had power to grant it (Darney v. Calder District Committee (1904), 7 F. 239).

"Establishment" of a business.

(d) The offence would be committed by the establishment of the business, i.e., by the beginning to work, and not by the mere erection of the building or premises. But notice of the objection to the establishment of the business should be given as soon as possible.

Slaughtering.

A market company, on whose premises cattle had never been slaughtered before, erected a building in which they allowed persons to slaughter cattle on payment of 2*s.* a head, the company finding the tackle attached to the building, but the persons slaughtering bringing their own implements. It was held that the company were liable under the corresponding provisions of the P. H. A., 1848, s. 64, for having "newly established" the business of slaughterers of cattle (Liverpool Cattle Market Co. v. Hodson (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 131; 31 J. P. 245). The trade of a slaughterer of cattle, which was included in s. 64, does not appear in the present section, being specially provided for by ss. 169, 170, post, pp. 389, 393.

The business of a butcher, though involving the slaughtering of beasts on the premises, was held not to be necessarily an "offensive, noisy or noisome trade," within the meaning of a restrictive covenant, in a lease (Cleaver v. Bacon (1887), 4 T. L. R. 27; Rapley v. Smart (1893), 10 T. L. R. 174).

Bone boiling or steaming.

The C. company, without leave of the sanitary authority, carried on a business of steaming bones by screwing them down in metal cylinders hermetically sealed, and introducing dry steam, which stripped the bones and caused no offensive smell, no water being used in the process:—Held, that quarter sessions were right in quashing a conviction of the company under this section in respect of an "offensive" trade of bone boiling (Cardiff Manure Co. v. Cardiff Union (1890), 54 J. P. 661). Bone boiling may, of course, be an actionable nuisance: see Verco v. Morris (1881), 26 Sol. J. 126.

Brick burning.

An injunction was granted to restrain a person from burning bricks on his own land so as to be a nuisance to a neighbour (Walter v. Selfe (1851), 20 L. J. Ch. 433. See also Att.-Gen. v. Keymer Brick Co., Ltd. (1903), 67 J. P. 434; 1 L. G. R. 654). But in Cleeve v. Mahaney (1861), 25 J. P. 819, where the nuisance was temporary only, KINDERSLEY, V.-C., refused to grant an interim injunction to enable the plaintiff to bring his action at law. He held that the question whether brick-burning is a nuisance must depend upon circumstances, and that no general rule as to distance could be laid down. In Hole v. Barlow (1858), 4 C. B. (N.S.) 334; 22 J. P. 530, an action for a nuisance arising from the burning of bricks on the defendant's own land near to the plaintiff's dwelling-house, BYLES, J., told the jury that no action lay for the reasonable use of a lawful trade in a convenient and proper place, even though someone might suffer inconvenience from its being so carried on; and he left to the jury two questions: (1) Was the place in which the bricks were burned a proper and convenient place for the purpose? and (2) if it was, was the nuisance such as to make the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable? It was held that this was a proper direction. This case was overruled, however, by the Exchequer Chamber in Bamford v. Turnley (1862), 3 B. & S. 62. There it was held that where a man by an act on his own land, such as burning bricks, causes so much annoyance to another in the enjoyment of a neighbouring tenement as to amount primâ facie to a cause of action, it is no answer that the act was done in a proper and convenient spot, and was a reasonable use of the land. It was also held that the fitness of the locality does not prevent the carrying on of an offensive, though lawful, trade from being an actionable nuisance; but whenever, taking all the circumstances into consideration, including the nature and extent of the plaintiff's enjoyment before the act complained of, the annoyance is sufficiently great to amount to a nuisance, an action will lie whatever the locality may be. An injunction was granted to restrain brick-burning in Beardmore v. Tredwell (1862), 31 L. J. Ch. 892; 7 L. T. 207; but the remarks of STUART, V.-C., who followed Hole v. Barlow, supra, must be read subject to the decision in Bamford v. Turnley, supra. The latter case was followed in Cavey v. Ledbitter (1863), 13 C. B. (N.S.) 470, but ERLE, C.J., added that it would be a misdirection if a judge told a jury to consider solely the evidence adduced to show discomfort to the plaintiff, and not to consider also any evidence showing that the act complained of was one of ownership on the part of the defendant, which was clearly lawful if it did not cause discomfort to a neighbour, and that it was done with full intention to prevent discomfort in respect of time and place and manner and degree. In Wanstead L. B. v. Hill (1863), 13 C. B. (N.S.) 479, it was held that the business of brick-making was not of itself a noxious or offensive business within the meaning of the corresponding clause in the P. H. A., 1848. The court held that the business must be of a noxious or offensive nature analogous to those specified at the beginning of the clause. WILLES, J., observed, that "it is necessary to be extremely cautious in construing this Act, whereby trades are brought within the jurisdiction of justices." He said that "the substances, which are dealt with in the trades which are specified, are substances which, without anything being done to them, must be, or by progress of time must necessarily become, a nuisance and annoyance to the neighbourhood." Persons aggrieved by brick-burning must, therefore, have recourse to their ordinary remedy by action for damages or an injunction. The principles on which an injunction will be granted or refused have been already indicated. An injunction was refused in Luscombe v. Steer (1867), 17 L. T. 229; 15 W. R. 1191; and granted in Roberts v. Clarke (1868), 18 L. T. 49; Bareham v. Hall (1870), 22 L. T. 116; White v. Jameson, ante, p. 177; and Dunston v. Neale (1885), 1 T. L. R. 462. In Crawford v. Hornsea Steam Brick and Tile Co. (1876), 45 L. J. Ch. 432; 34 L. T. 923, where damages instead of an injunction were awarded, a memorandum of the decree was ordered to be indorsed on the plaintiff's title deed.

"Other noxious or offensive" trade, etc.

In Cardell v. Newquay L. B. (1875), 39 J. P. 742, the Court of Queen's Bench decided that they could not hold that the manufacturing of manure was of itself a noxious and offensive trade, and there being no evidence of its being noxious or offensive to the locality, they held that no penalty was incurred: see also Cardiff Manure Co. v. Cardiff Union, on p. 212, ante. But such a manufacture may be within the provisions of the Alkali Works Regulation Act, 1906, mentioned below. And s. 114, post, p. 215, may apply, see Malton Board of Health v. Malton Farmers Manure Co., in notes thereto. And, of course, manure works may be an actionable nuisance, see Knight v. Gardner (1869), 19 L. T. 673 (manufacture from night soil); Att.-Gen. v. Thames Fish Guano and Oil Co. (1896), Times, February 29th; Att.-Gen. v. Plymouth Fish Guano and Oil Co., Ltd., on p. 173, ante.

Manure works.

The business of cow-keeping in a borough may be so conducted and regulated as not to be a nuisance or offensive (Manson v. Forrest (1887), 14 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 802).

Cow-keeping.

In Passey v. Oxford L. B. (1879), 43 J. P. 622, the appellant set up the business of a rag and bone merchant, and the justices convicted him under this section, holding as a fact that the business was noxious and ejusdem generis with those specified in the section. It was held that the conviction was right.

Rag and bone trade.

In Braintree L. B. v. Boyton (1885), 48 J. P. 582; 52 L. T. 99, it was held that this section did not apply to the keeping of a fried-fish shop, which was not a place necessarily offensive. But a fried-fish shop might be within the provisions of s. 114, post, p. 215; see that section and Houldershaw v. Martin, in the notes thereto. It may also be an actionable nuisance (Adams v. Ursell, [1913] 1 Ch. 269); Errington v. Birt (1911), 105 L. T. 373. And compare Duke of Devonshire v. Brookshaw (1899), 63 J. P. 569; 81 L. T. 83.

Fried fish shops.

Note to Section 112.

An injunction was granted, restraining the defendant, a restaurant keeper, from allowing the escape of noxious odours to the injury of his neighbours' premises (Doré v. Pecorini (1887), 31 Sol. J. 726). See also Sanders-Clark v. Grosvenor Mansions Co., on p. 173, ante.

Restaurants.

Hospital.

A small-pox hospital is not a noxious or offensive business within the meaning of this section (Withington L. B. v. Manchester (Mayor, etc. of), [1893] 2 Ch. 19; 57 J. P. 340). See also as to hospitals for infectious diseases, cases in notes to s. 131, post, p. 238.

Gut-scraping.

As to gut-scraping and sorting, see London C. C. v. Hirsch (1899), 63 J. P. 822; 81 L. T. 447.

Cockle boiling.

The L. G. B. expressed the opinion that it was open to doubt whether the business of boiling shell fish could be regarded as an offensive trade within the meaning of s. 112, and that with regard to any nuisance arising from deposits of shells, the appropriate remedy would be the enforcement of the nuisance provisions of the Act. They drew attention to the definition in s. 91 (4).

Bill-posting.

The trade of bill-posting has been held to be an "offensive" trade within the meaning of those words in a restrictive covenant applicable to the land on which the defendants erected an advertisement hoarding (Nussey v. Provincial Bill Posting Co., [1909] 1 Ch. 734).

Other actionable nuisances from trade odours.

It is, of course, impossible to enumerate the various trades which are noxious or offensive within the meaning of this section. Nor are cases in which the court has interfered at the suit of persons aggrieved any guide in the determination of the question whether such trades are noxious or offensive, for a trade not noxious may be so conducted as to be an actionable nuisance, as has been already stated with reference to brick-burning. The following cases, in addition to those mentioned above, may be referred to as instances of actionable nuisances arising from trades or manufactures: vapours and smells from candle-making (Bliss v. Hall (1838), 4 Bing. N. C. 183); from fat smelting (Att.-Gen. v. Cole, [1901] 1 Ch. 205; 65 J. P. 88); from arsenic works (R. v. Garland (1851), 15 J. P. 260); from copper works (Bankart v. Houghton (1859), 28 L. J. Ch. 473; St. Helen's Smelting Co. v. Tipping (1865), L. R. 1 Ch. 66; 29 J. P. 579); from glass works (Savile v. Kilner, on p. 173, ante); coke ovens (Salvin v. North Brancepeth Coal Co. (1874), L. R. 9 Ch. 705); smoke from cement works (Umfreville v. Johnson (1875), L. R. 10 Ch. 580); the manufacture of tar, sulphate of ammonia and anthracene (Bigsby v. Dickinson (1876), 4 Ch. D. 24); chemical works (Brooke v. Wigg (1878), 8 Ch. D. 510); pig keeping (Att.-Gen. v. Squire (1907), 5 L. G. R. 99); smell from burning refuse (Att.-Gen. v. G. C. Rail. Co., on p. 173, ante); deposit of house refuse (Att.-Gen. v. Keymer Brick and Tile Co. (1903), 67 J. P. 434; 1 L. G. R. 654). As to a public laundry coming within a restrictive covenant, see Knight v. Simmonds, [1896] 2 Ch. 294.

Effect of authority's consent.

The authority's consent merely renders the establishment of a noxious trade no breach of the section. It cannot legalise what would otherwise be actionable or illegal. A business within the section may be carried on so as not to amount to a nuisance at common law; but the statute forbids the very establishment of it without the consent of the authority, and if, when established with their consent, the business is so carried on as to be a nuisance, the ordinary remedies (see s. 111, ante, p. 210) will be available against the person so carrying it on.

The Alkali, etc. Works Regulation Act, 1906, regulates certain noxious or offensive trades, and is set out in App. I., post, Vol. II. See also the Explosives Act, 1875, and the Acts relating to the storing and safe keeping of petroleum (34 & 35 Vict. c. 105; 42 & 43 Vict. c. 47; 44 & 45 Vict. c. 67, in App. I., post, Vol. II.).

For the powers and duties of local authorities as to bakehouses and laundries, see the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1901 and 1907, in App. I., post, Vol. II., and note to s. 10, ante, p. 41.

The P. H. A., 1907, s. 51.

(e) As to the words "any other noxious or offensive trade, business or manufacture," see cases in preceding note, especially Wanstead L. B. v. Hill. These words are repealed in any district in which s. 51 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, has been put in force by order of the L. G. B. or M. of H., and the following words are substituted, "any other trade, business, or manufacture, which the local authority declare by order confirmed by the M. of H., and published in such manner as the Ministry direct, to be an offensive trade." Moreover, the local authority of such a district are empowered to make byelaws with respect to any trade which is an offensive trade under s. 112 of the Act of 1875, as amended by the Act of 1907, whether established before or after the commencement of the latter Act, in order to prevent or diminish any noxious or injurious effects of the trade. Note to Section 112.

The L. G. B. pointed out to a district council that an offensive trade which is not referred to by name in s. 112 of the Act of 1875, and which would, under that Act, have required the consent of the district council to its establishment, may under the later enactment, when put in force by order of the Board, be established without such consent unless it is specifically declared to be an offensive trade by order confirmed by the Board. They considered that a district council should be prepared to declare by order under s. 51 of the Act of 1907, as soon as it came into operation, every trade to which they consider it applicable (other than a trade specifically mentioned in s. 112).

In 1909 the L. G. B. declared s. 51 to be in force in C. In 1911 the appellants, without the consent of the authority, established in C. the business of dealers in raw hides and skins, which is not one of the six offensive trades particularly specified in s. 112. In 1912 the authority made an order whereby the trade of a dealer in raw hides and skins was declared to be an offensive trade, and this order was duly confirmed. On a summons against the appellants for carrying on their business at a date subsequent to the confirmatory Order, it was held that they were not liable to a penalty, for the business was not unlawful at the date of its establishment (Butchers' Hide, Skin and Wool Co., Ltd. v. Seacome, [1913] 2 K. B. 401 ; 77 J. P. 219) ; and see also Mayo v. Stazicker, [1921] 2 K. B. 196 ; 85 J. P. 141.

The Board and their successors, the M. of H., have confirmed orders made by district councils under the section as amended by the Act of 1907 dealing with the following trades amongst others : Animal charcoal manufacturer, blood albumen maker, bone burner, candle maker, dealer in blood, rags, bones, hides, skins, or butchers' waste, fat melter, fish curer, fish fryer, manure maker, glue maker, gut-scraper, parchment maker, size maker, poultry meal manufacturer, tallow refiner, and tanner.

(f) As to the recovery of the penalty, see s. 251, post.

113. Any urban authority (a) may from time to time make byelaws (b) with respect to any offensive trades (c) established with their consent (d) either before or after the passing of this Act, in order to prevent or diminish the noxious or injurious effects thereof. Byelaws as to offensive trades in urban district.

(a) See note (b) to preceding section.

(b) See ss. 182—186, post, as to the making, confirmation, and publication of byelaws, and s. 251, post, as to the enforcing of them. See also note (e) to preceding section and notes to s. 51 of the P. H. A., 1907, post.

The M. of H. issue model byelaws under this section, in respect of certain trades.

(c) These words are general, and are not confined to any specified trades. See the preceding section and notes thereto as to the trades which can be regulated.

(d) See s. 112 and note (a) thereunder. If a rural district council obtain urban powers as to offensive trades, it follows from this provision that they cannot make and enforce byelaws as to trades already established in their district. See, however, s. 51 of the P. H. A., 1907, note (e) to preceding section, and note (b) to s. 114.

114. Where any candle-house melting-house melting-place or soap-house, or any slaughter-house, or any building or place for boiling offal or blood, or for boiling burning or crushing bones, or any manufactory building or place used for any trade business process or manufacture causing effluvia (a), is certified to any urban authority (b) by their medical officer of health, or by any two legally qualified medical practitioners (c), or by any ten inhabitants (d) of the district of such urban authority (b), to be a nuisance or (e) injurious to the health of any of the inhabitants Duty of urban authority to complain to justice of nuisance arising from offensive trade.

Section 114. of the district, such urban authority shall (f) direct complaint to be made before a justice, who may summon a person by or on whose behalf the trade so complained of is carried on to appear before a court of summary jurisdiction (g).

The court shall inquire into the complaint, and if it appears to the court that the business carried on by the person complained of is a nuisance, or causes any effluvia which is a nuisance or (h) injurious to the health of any of the inhabitants of the district, and unless it be shown that such person has used the best practicable means for abating such nuisance, or preventing or counteracting such effluvia (i), the person so offending (being the owner or occupier of the premises, or being a foreman or other person employed by such owner or occupier,) shall be liable to a penalty (k) not exceeding five pounds nor less than forty shillings, and on a second and any subsequent conviction to a penalty double the amount of the penalty imposed for the last preceding conviction, but the highest amount of such penalty shall not in any case exceed the sum of two hundred pounds :

Provided, that the court may suspend (l) its final determination on condition that the person complained of undertakes to adopt, within a reasonable time, such means as the court may deem to be practicable and order to be carried into effect for abating such nuisance, or mitigating or preventing the injurious effects of such effluvia, or if such person gives notice of appeal to the court of quarter sessions in manner provided by this Act (m).

Any urban authority may, if they think fit, on such certificate as is in this section mentioned, cause to be taken any proceedings in any superior court of law or equity (n) against any person in respect of the matters alleged in such certificate.

(a) It will be observed that these trades are not all enumerated in s. 112, and that there is no limitation in this section as to the time when they were established.

(b) See note (b) to s. 112, and note (d) to s. 113. District councils have sometimes found this section useful in the case of offensive trades over which they had been unable or had neglected to obtain control by means of byelaws under s. 113. In rural districts the section must of course be declared to be in force in the particular parish or parishes by order of the M. of H.

Medical certificates.

(c) By 49 & 50 Vict. c. 48, s. 27, a registered medical practitioner is defined to mean a person registered under the Medical Acts, i.e., the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, and any Acts amending the same. By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 37, the certificate will be invalid unless both the medical practitioners signing it are duly registered. And by s. 27 of the same Act a copy of the medical register, purporting to be printed and published by the registrar of the general council under the direction of the council, is evidence of registration.

(d) As to the meaning of the word "inhabitants," see Chilton v. London Corporation (1878), 7 Ch. D. 735 ; Hough v. Clark (1907), 23 T. L. R. 682. It is presumed that the word here applies to residents in the district. For a form of certificate for use under this section, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 479.

"Nuisance or injurious to health."

(e) If the effluvia amount to a nuisance in the sense of causing annoyance and discomfort, it is sufficient to bring the trade within this section without proving also that injury to health results from such effluvia (Malton Board of Health v. Malton Farmers' Manure Co. (1879), 4 Ex. D. 302 ; 44 J. P. 155). This case has been followed with reference to similar words in ss. 47 and 91, ante, pp. 116, 165. And in Houldershaw v. Martin (1885), 49 J. P. 179 ; 1 T. L. R. 323, it was held that the medical officer's certificate under this section was sufficient, though it stated simply that a fried-fish shop was a nuisance, and did not further state that it was injurious to health. Note to Section 114.

(f) It appears that the authority must proceed. They should, however, have a proper certificate in writing, supported by some reasonable evidence to satisfy them as to the propriety of taking the requisite steps. It is not necessary for the authority before taking proceedings to serve notice under s. 94, ante, p. 176 (Bird v. St. Mary Abbotts, Kensington (Vestry of), [1895] 1 Q. B. 912; 59 J. P. 391). Duty of local authority.

(g) See the definition, ante, p. 36. Though the court must inquire into the complaint, still a primâ facie case should be laid before it so as to justify a summons.

(h) See note (e), supra.

(i) The burden of proving this is on the defendant. See also the S. J. Acts, 1848, s. 14 (as amended by s. 44 and the fourth schedule of the Criminal Justice Administration Act, 1914), and 1879, s. 39 (2). It was on the complainant under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 27. Exception.

(k) See, as to recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post. Although by the text the penalty is not to be less than 40*s*. the court has power to reduce that amount in the case of a first conviction under the S. J. A., 1879, s. 4. Penalty

(l) The difficulties which existed in 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 27, have not been removed in this section. It does not appear what is to be done as to the removal of the suspension, if the works directed by the court be executed, or if they be not executed, or if they fail to effect their object. Probably the court should adjourn the hearing, and after the adjournment, if the works have been done and the nuisance abated, the court might exercise their power under the Probation of Offenders Act, 1907, which empowers them, without proceeding to conviction, to dismiss the information with or without payment of damages or costs, or perhaps the court might make the order with a direction that it was not to be drawn up if certain things were done. Unless, however, there be some determination of the information, there can be no appeal, for in default of a determination of the court there is no cause of appeal. There cannot, therefore, be a suspension of the final determination in order to enable the defendant to appeal. By suspension is understood that the court may withhold their order, so as to see whether the party complained of will carry out the directions as to abating the nuisance. Suspension of judgment.

(m) See s. 269, post, as to appeals. Appeal.

(n) That is, in the High Court of Justice, but the authority should carefully weigh the consequences, and be prepared to pay the costs on failure of the proceedings. For a case in which proceedings for an injunction were taken, see Att.-Gen. v. Smith, Times, June 7th, 1894. See also the cases collected under the notes to s. 107, ante, p. 207. Proceedings in superior court.

115. Where any house building manufactory or place which is certified in pursuance of the last preceding section to be a nuisance or injurious to the health of any of the inhabitants of the district of an urban authority (a) is situated without such district (b), such urban authority may take or cause to be taken any proceedings by that section authorised in respect of the matters alleged in the certificate, with the same incidents and consequences, as if the house building manufactory or place were situated within such district; so, however, that summary proceedings (c) shall not in any case be had otherwise than before a court having jurisdiction in the district where the house building manufactory or place is situated. Power to proceed where nuisance arises from offensive trade carried on without district.

This section shall extend to the metropolis so far as to authorise proceedings to be taken under it by any nuisance authority in the metropolis in respect of any house building manufactory or place which is certified as aforesaid to be a nuisance or injurious to the health of any of the inhabitants within the area of their jurisdiction, and is situated within the district of a local authority under this Act; or by any urban authority in respect of any house building manufactory or place which is certified as aforesaid to be a nuisance or injurious to the health of any of the inhabitants of their district, and is situated within the jurisdiction of any such nuisance authority (d).

(a) See note (b) to s. 112.

(b) This clause removed any doubt as to whether 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 27, had any operation in respect of trades carried on without the district of the authority. In the case of a rural council who have obtained urban powers under the section in regard to part only of their area, the word "district" will presumably be construed as meaning a contributory place in which the powers are in force.

(c) That is under s. 251, post.

Application to metropolis.

(d) The P. H. (London) A., 1891, s. 21 (5), provides that s. 115 of the P. H. A., 1875, shall continue to extend to London, with the substitution of a sanitary authority under that Act, for a nuisance authority mentioned in the said section, and any reference in that section to a nuisance in the metropolis, or to any building, manufactory, or place in the metropolis which is injurious to health, shall include any nuisance within the meaning of that Act, and any manufactory, building, or place which is dangerous to health. By s. 141 of the same Act, "London" is defined to mean the administrative county of London.

The concluding clause of s. 115, supra, which contained a definition of "nuisance authority," was repealed by the P. H. (London) A., 1891. See a similar repeal in s. 108, referred to in the notes thereto, at p. 209.

UNSOUND MEAT, ETC. (a).

Power of medical officer of health to inspect meat, etc.

116. Any medical officer of health or inspector of nuisances may at all reasonable times (b) inspect and examine any animal (c) carcase meat poultry game flesh fish fruit vegetables corn bread flour or milk (d) exposed for sale, or deposited in any place (e) for the purpose of sale, or of preparation for sale, and intended for the food of man (f), the proof that the same was not exposed or deposited for any such purpose, or was not intended for the food of man, resting with the party charged; and if any such animal carcase meat poultry game flesh fish fruit vegetables corn bread flour or milk appears to such medical officer or inspector to be diseased or unsound or unwholesome or unfit for the food of man, he may seize and carry away the same himself or by an assistant, in order to have the same dealt with by a justice (g).

The P. H. (Regulations as to Food) A., 1907.

(a) In connection with this subject reference may be made to the Public Health (Regulations as to Food) Act, 1907, post, under which regulations may be made for the prevention of danger arising to public health from the importation, preparation, storage, and distribution of articles of food or drink (other than drugs or water) intended for sale for human consumption.

The Tuberculosis Order, 1914.

See also as to tuberculous meat, the Tuberculosis Order, 1914, in App. II., post, Vol. II., and Circulars preceding it.

Entry.

(b) 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, s. 11, enabled a justice to grant a warrant to justify entry for the purpose of inspection; no such provision is here made, but if admission is prevented the party preventing is rendered liable to a penalty under s. 118, post, p. 226; and see s. 119, post, p. 226, as to granting a warrant to search for concealed food.

"Reasonable" times.

Sunday is not necessarily an unreasonable time. This question must depend upon the circumstances of the case (Small v. Bickley (1875), 39 J. P. 422; 32 L. T. 726). In that case a butcher, at his residence, half a mile from his shop, on a Sunday afternoon, was requested to go himself, or send some one with a key, to admit the inspector to his shop, in order that some meat there might be examined. He refused, and was convicted under 26 & 27 Vict. c. 117, s. 3, of preventing, obstructing, or impeding the inspector when duly engaged in carrying into execution the provisions of the Act. It was held that although Sunday afternoon might, under some circumstances, be a reasonable time for examining the meat, the butcher at most had refused to assist the inspector, and had not prevented, obstructed, or impeded him within the meaning of the section.

H., an inspector of nuisances, was convicted of perjury on an indictment which alleged that, upon the hearing of an information against G. for exposing for sale a number of rabbits which were unfit for the food of man, it was a material question whether H. had duly inspected and examined the carcases of the rabbits, and whether they had appeared to him to be unfit for the food of man before and at the time when he seized the same under the above section. The indictment then alleged that H. falsely swore (among other things) that he had examined critically every rabbit, and set out the evidence giving the details of such examination; and further alleged that H. did not examine the rabbits in the manner sworn. It appeared that upon two occasions, subsequently to the time of seizure, when he had merely made a cursory examination (sufficient, however, to entitle him to seize the rabbits), he had examined them as he had sworn he had. It also appeared that at the time of the seizure the rabbits were, in fact, unfit for the food of man. It was held that as the indictment did not allege that the evidence was given with reference to the time of seizure, and since the evidence, if taken with reference to the other occasions upon which examinations were made, was perfectly true, all the allegations might be true without H. having sworn falsely, and that, therefore, no offence was disclosed upon the indictment (R. v. Hadfield (1886), 51 J. P. 344; 55 L. T. 783).

Live animals.

(c) In Moody v. Leach (1880), 44 J. P. 459, a recorder held at quarter sessions that the word animal included a live animal. But see Bothamley v. Jolly, post, p. 225. According to the evidence of Drs. Letheby and Tidy, in a case reported at 37 J. P. 267, an animal killed during, or immediately before, or after parturition is unfit for human food; and see R. v. Kempson (1893), Times, June 27th.

Not all food included.

(d) It is to be noticed that these words are specific, and do not include every kind of food. For instance, cheese is not mentioned, and stipendiary magistrates at Manchester and Leeds have respectively held that the section does not extend to putrid butter, or bad eggs exposed for sale (Stone's Justices' Manual, 54th ed., p. 1218).

Where, however, the local authority have adopted the P. H. A., 1890, Part III., s. 28 thereof provides that ss. 116—119 of this Act shall extend and apply to all articles intended for the food of man sold or exposed for sale, or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale, or of preparation for sale within the district.

The byelaws of municipal corporations sometimes provide for the seizure of unwholesome food; and in Shillito v. Thompson (1875), 1 Q. B. D. 12; 39 J. P. 773, a defendant was held to be rightly convicted under such a byelaw for selling unwholesome cheese.

"Place."

(e) This word is used in a general and unrestricted sense (Young v. Grattridge (1868), L. R. 4 Q. B. 166; 33 J. P. 260). In Daly v. Webb (1869), 4 Ir. C. L. R. 309, diseased meat upon a cart passing along a street in Dublin from a slaughter-house to a preserved meat manufactory, was held to have been properly seized under a similar section. In Williams v. Allen, [1916] 1 K. B. 425; 80 J. P. 55, the unsound meat at the time of seizure was being carried in a cart from a knackers' yard where it had been partially prepared to a slaughter-house where it was to be further prepared for sale. It was held that the meat was deposited in a place for the purpose of preparation for sale within the meaning of this section. Cf. Neilson v. Parkhill, on p. 224, post.

(f) It must be carefully noticed that the provision does not apply to food for animals, nor to articles prepared for exportation, for manure or similar purposes.

Duty of officers.

(g) The responsibility is imposed on the medical officer or inspector of satisfying himself that the article in question is exposed for sale or deposited for the purpose of sale, or of preparation for sale, and intended for the food of man; and if he is so satisfied he may seize. As to what constitutes an "exposure" or "deposit" for sale, see Ollett v. Jordan, [1918] 2 K. B. 41; 82 J. P. 221; Ollett v. Henry, [1919] 2 K. B. 88; 83 J. P. 165, and the cases mentioned under note (d) of the next section.

Note to Section 116.

It is not necessary for him to give notice to the owner of the goods seized, nor is the justice before whom the goods are taken bound to summon the owner before the condemnation thereof under the next section (White v. Redfern (1879), 5 Q. B. D. 15; 44 J. P. 87); at the same time the justice may, if he sees fit, hear evidence as to the condition of the article (see note (b) to next section). Where the officer knows of the unsound condition of the goods there is no duty upon him to pass this knowledge on to the vendor (Weir v. Thomas (1915), 79 J. P. 54).

The officer cannot himself destroy the articles seized. He must take them to be dealt with by a justice under the next section. If he does destroy them his action is illegal; and, if he is an officer over whose appointment and removal the M. of H exercise no control, the local authority may be liable in damages for his wrongful acts; under such circumstances an authority was held liable in Ormerod v. Rochdale (Mayor, etc. of) (1898), 62 J. P. 153. If, however, the power to appoint and to remove is subject to the control of the Ministry, it is doubtful if the officer can be regarded as the servant of the authority. As to the evidence necessary of the appointment of the officer, see Kates v. Jeffery, [1914] 3 K. B. 160; 78 J. P. 310. In Ormerod v. Rochdale, supra, BRUCE, J., was careful to point out that the power to appoint the officer, whose wrongful act gave rise to that action, was vested in the corporation, who were authorised to fix and pay his salary, and had power to remove him. It has since been held that a local authority are not liable for the negligence of an officer appointed by them, e.g., an inspector under the Diseases of Animals Acts, whilst he is discharging duties imposed by order of a Government department (Stanbury v. Exeter Corporation, [1905] 2 K. B. 838; 70 J. P. 11). See also Tozeland v. West Ham Guardians, [1907] 1 K. B. 920; 71 J. P. 194; O'Neill v. Drohan and Waterford C. C., [1914] 2 I. R. 41; affirmed (at p. 495) on other grounds in the Court of Appeal. In a Canadian case the following principle was approved, viz.: That a municipal corporation is not responsible for the unlawful or negligent acts of officers appointed, in obedience to an Act of the Legislature, to perform public services in which the corporation has no private interest, and from which it derives no special benefit or advantage in its corporate capacity (Winterbottom v. London Police Commissioners (1901), 1 Ontario L. R. 549). See also Forsyth v. Canniff and City of Toronto (1890), 20 Ontario R. 478, where it was held that the medical officer of a municipal corporation is not a servant of the corporation so as to make them liable for his acts done in pursuance of his statutory duties. The principle of the above Canadian cases appears to have commended itself to WILLS, J., in Stanbury v. Exeter Corporation, supra. It has been held that a district medical officer is not under any "contract of service" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (Murphy v. Enniscorthy Guardians, [1908] 3 I. R. 609; and cf. In re National Insurance Act, [1913] 1 I. R. 244; but these cases were distinguished when a question arose as to a workman employed by a board of guardians who had the right to direct him in his work and of dismissing him at their own pleasure and who were liable to pay his wages: see Finlay v. Tullamore Guardians, [1914] 2 I. R. 233.

Except where the P. H. A., 1890, s. 28, is in force there must be a proper seizure to justify subsequent proceedings under the next section. See Vinter v. Hind, in note (e) to the next section.

Powers of assistants.

Although the medical officer or inspector may seize and carry away by an assistant, the execution of the powers conferred by the section is personal, and cannot be carried into effect by an assistant medical officer or assistant inspector in the absence of his principal. This view is concurred in by the L. G. B., who have stated that upon receiving instructions from the inspector of nuisances, an assistant may act in the circumstances contemplated by the section, as amended by s. 28 of the Act of 1890, but would not have the power of seizure. Under s. 131 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, he might be specially appointed as an officer of the council with powers conferred by the enactment. Under s. 119 of the Act of 1875, upon obtaining a warrant from a justice he could act in the manner authorised by that section.

Power of justice to order destruction

117. If it appears to the justice that any animal carcase meat poultry game flesh fish fruit vegetables corn bread flour or milk so seized (a) is diseased or unsound or unwholesome or unfit for the food of man, he shall condemn the same, and order it to be destroyed or so disposed of as to prevent it from being exposed for sale or used for the food of man (b) ; and the person (c) to whom the same belongs or did belong at the time of exposure for sale, or in whose possession or on whose premises the same was found (d), shall be liable to a penalty (e) not exceeding twenty pounds for every animal carcase or fish or piece of meat (f) flesh or fish, or any poultry or game, or for the parcel of fruit vegetables corn bread or flour or for the milk so condemned, or, at the discretion of the justice, without the infliction of a fine, to imprisonment for a term of not more than three months. Section 117. — of unsound meat, etc.

The justice who, under this section, is empowered to convict the offender may be either the justice who may have ordered the article to be disposed of or destroyed, or any other justice having jurisdiction in the place.

(a) Under this section seizure in accordance with s. 116 is a condition precedent to either condemnation or infliction of a penalty: see Vinter v. Hind, on p. 225, post ; but where s. 28 of the P. H. A., 1890, is in force, such seizure is no longer a condition precedent to either : see Salt v. Tomlinson, p. 225, post. Necessity for seizure.

(b) All the justice need do is to inspect the article, and if he is satisfied that it is unsound or unwholesome he is to condemn it, and order it to be destroyed or disposed of so as to prevent its being used for human food. He need not before so doing give notice to, or summon, the owner : see White v. Redfern, supra, s. 116, note (g). But he may, if he thinks fit, hear evidence tendered by the owner as to its soundness (Re Bater and Birkenhead (Mayor, etc. of), [1893] 2 Q. B. 77 ; 58 J. P. 7). The evidence must, however, be confined to that point, for the magistrate is not entitled to consider, before condemning an article, whether it was intended for the food of man, or was sold or exposed for sale or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale, but only whether it is unsound or unwholesome, or unfit for the food of man (Thomas v. Van Os, [1900] 2 Q. B. 448 ; 64 J. P. 582). Jurisdiction of justice.

In Williams v. Narberth Sanitary Authority, Times, December 7th, 1882, the court expressed an opinion that condemnation on the day after seizure during hot weather in July was bad. In Burton v. Bradley (1886), 51 J. P. 118, it was held that the text did not require condemnation to be on the same day as the seizure, but that it was enough if reasonable diligence was used.

Several questions of difficulty may arise after the condemnation of the goods seized. It may transpire that the goods were not properly seized, as in Vinter v. Hind, p. 225, post, or that they were not intended for the food of man, or that they were not in fact unsound, etc. In several cases an owner has claimed compensation under s. 308, post, in accordance with suggestions made in White v. Redfern, p. 220, ante. In Re Bater and Birkenhead (Mayor, etc. of), supra, where the magistrate refused to condemn meat, it was held that the owner was not entitled to refuse to take it back, and could only recover the damage sustained in consequence of its seizure ; but that he was entitled to be repaid the costs reasonably incurred by him in attending and resisting condemnation. In Davies and Rhondda U. D. C., In re (1899), 80 L. T. 696, it was held that on an arbitration under s. 308, post, the arbitrator has only to consider whether the claimant has suffered damage, and the amount of such damage ; and that the costs of successfully defending a prosecution for exposing for sale unsound meat, the subject of the claim for compensation, cannot be awarded (Davies and Rhondda U. D. C., In re (1899), 80 L. T. 696). In a later case, the Court of Appeal held that, where meat has been condemned and destroyed, and the owner claims compensation, the arbitrator has jurisdiction to decide the question whether the meat was in fact sound, and may award as part of the compensation the expenses incurred by the claimant in successfully defending a prosecution (Walshaw v. Brighouse (Mayor, etc. of), [1899] 2 Q. B. 286). But this decision was questioned by the Court of Appeal in Hobbs v. Winchester Corporation, [1910] 2 K. B. 471 ; 74 J. P. 413 : see also In re Smith and Belfast Corporation, [1910] 2 I. R. 285. In an action for compensation for the seizure of meat erroneously alleged to be unsound the local authority were held not to be protected by the limitation of time imposed by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (Glasgow Corporation v. Smithfield and Argentine Meat Co., Ltd., [1912] S. C. 364). Owner's remedy in case of unjustifiable seizure or condemnation.

Note to Section 117.

In In re Smith and Belfast Corporation, supra, an Irish judge held that compensation could not be recovered for general trade loss due to the publicity of the proceedings. In Hobbs v. Winchester Corporation, [1910] 2 K. B. 46; 74 J. P. 165 (reversed on another ground), CHANNELL, J., held reluctantly on the authority of Walshaw v. Brighouse Corporation, supra, that such general loss was recoverable.

It is now settled that no compensation is recoverable if meat intended for human food is in fact unsound, though the owner does not know it (Hobbs v. Winchester Corporation, in C. A., supra; In re Smith and Belfast Corporation, supra).

Liability of dealer to retailer who is fined.

If a retailer buys provisions with an implied or express warranty, and such provisions are seized and destroyed, and he himself is fined, because, unknown to him, they are unfit for food, he may recover from his vendor, in addition to their value, the costs of his defence and costs ordered to be paid by him; and, semble, also the amount of the fine, if he can show that it was not imposed, or increased, in consequence of any default on his part (Crage v. Fry (1903), 67 J. P. 240; 1 L. G. R. 253). Cf. R. Leslie, Ltd. v. Reliable Advertising and Addressing Agency, [1915] 1 K. B. 652.

A butcher bought the carcase of a pig and exposed it for sale. On the same day it was seized as unfit for human food. It was eventually destroyed, and the butcher was fined £20. In an action by him against his vendor, a jury found that the meat was unfit for food; that the purchaser impliedly made known to the defendant the purpose for which the meat was required; that he did so in such a way as to show that he relied on the vendor's skill and judgment; and that the plaintiff had sustained damages (excluding loss of business) £39 16*s.* 2*d.*, and for loss of business, £200. It was held that neither head of damages was too remote (Cointat v. Myham & Son (1913), 77 J. P. 217). On appeal a new trial was ordered on the ground that the judge misdirected the jury as to the possibility of the "custom of the market" excluding an implied warranty (78 J. P. 193; 30 T. L. R. 282). As to the liability of a butcher to a customer, see note (b) to s. 119, post, p. 226.

(c) As to the word "person," see p. 6, ante. In R. v. Ascanio Puck & Co., Ltd. (1912), 76 J. P. 487; 29 T. L. R. 11, it was held that a limited company could be indicted under the corresponding section of the London Act.

(d) In R. v. Blount (1879), 43 J. P. 383, the defendant was charged with having unlawfully exposed or deposited for sale or preparation for sale certain meat intended for human food. The magistrate dismissed the charge on the ground that the defendant was himself unaware that the meat was upon his premises, as it had arrived there and had been seized in his absence. Subsequently a summons was issued against the defendant in respect of the same seizure for having on his premises meat for the purpose of sale, etc., and the same evidence was given as on the first charge. The defendant was convicted, but the court quashed the conviction on the ground that he might have been convicted of the offence charged on the second summons when he appeared upon the first, and that the second summons was for the same matters.

Section creates two offences.

In White v. Redfern (1879), 49 L. J. M. C., at p. 22, FIELD, J., said that the section created two offences. It will be prudent, therefore, in issuing a summons, to confine it to one offence, otherwise a conviction founded upon it may be bad for duplicity.

The person liable.

"Belong to."

The appellant was an under-bailiff on N.'s estate, and it was his duty to obey the orders of the head bailiff. Two cows belonging to N. were slaughtered, as they were affected by disease. The appellant was not present; but on the same day he was told by the head bailiff to send the meat to P., and to go there himself to meet it. The appellant went to P. on the following day, and saw a butcher named B., and on the next day the head bailiff, learning that the meat had not been sent off, directed the appellant to take it to a station and consign it to B. The transit of the meat to the station was superintended by the appellant, who took charge of it; and it was sent by train in his name to B. at P., the appellant sending a telegram: "Two carcases of meat sent to you; make best of it." B. replied that the meat, which was then lying at P. station, was of no use to him. The appellant then sent a telegram to the station-master: "Ask consignee to do the best he can. If he can't dispose of it, bury it, and charge sender expenses." The meat was seized while lying at the station, and condemned as unsound. Upon these facts the appellant was convicted of exposing unsound meat for sale, being the person "to whom the same belonged":—Held, that there was no evidence that he was the person "to whom the meat belonged " within the meaning of this section (Newton v. Monkcom (1888), 52 J. P. 692 ; 58 L. T. 231).

Note to Section 117.

H. purchased from P., a salesman in a market, meat which was to P.'s knowledge diseased and unfit for food. It had been sent by a person in the country to P. for sale on commission in the usual way. The meat was seized at the shop of H. On a summons against P., under sub-s. (2) of s. 47 of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, it was held that he was not the person to whom the same " belongs or did belong at the time of exposure for sale," within the meaning of sub-s. (2). The court did not express a definite opinion on the point whether, if the meat had been seized when still in the possession of P., it might not properly be said to belong to him (Billing v. Prebble (1896), 66 L. J. Q. B. 180 ; 61 J. P. 86). They intimated that P. should have been proceeded against under sub-s. (3) of that section, as to which, see Grivell v. Malpas on p. 224, post, and cases cited therewith.

Ownership alone not sufficient where no exposure for sale.

The appellant, a farmer, sent to a London salesman meat, which to his knowledge was unsound, for the purpose of its being sold as human food. The salesman did not expose the meat for sale, but called the attention of an inspector to it. The inspector seized the meat and obtained a justice's order for its destruction. The appellant having been convicted of being the owner of unsound meat " unlawfully deposited for the purpose of sale and intended for the food of man," it was held that the conviction must be quashed, for there had been no exposure for sale, and the meat had not been found in the possession or on the premises of the appellant (Barlow v. Terrett, [1891] 2 Q. B. 107 ; 55 J. P. 632). The last-mentioned case was followed in Firth v. McPhail, [1905] 2 K. B. 300 ; 69 J. P. 203). There a cow had been killed when at the point of death from inflammation and dressed. The appellant, knowing the circumstances, purchased the diseased carcase, and arranged with a meat salesman to consign it to him for sale. The appellant subsequently deposited the carcase on the premises of the salesman for the purpose of sale for human food. The meat was seized at that place by an inspector and condemned. The appellant was convicted :—Held, that as there had been no exposure for sale by the appellant, but only a deposit for purposes of sale upon premises other than his own, he could not be convicted under s. 117, which was not affected by s. 28 of the P. H. A., 1890, and that, accordingly, the conviction must be quashed. The court intimated that upon similar facts an offence would have been committed under s. 47 (3) of the London Act. See as to this, Grivell v. Malpas, infra.

In Ollett v. Jordan, [1918] 2 K. B. 41 ; 82 J. P. 221, a small consignment of fish had been sent from Hull under an agreement to sell. When unpacked the fish was found to be unsound and the purchaser, exercising his right to accept or reject, rejected them. It was held that there was an " exposure for sale " by the consignor within the meaning of this section.

In Ollett v. Henry, [1919] 2 K. B. 88 ; 83 J. P. 165, the defendant was the secretary of a company who acted as agents of the Ministry of Food during the war. The company received the meat, distributed it amongst the local butchers, and collected the payments therefor themselves, receiving a commission. It was held that the distribution formed part of the sale of the meat by the Ministry and that the meat was deposited for the purpose of sale within the meaning of the section.

" Possession."

Meat was seized by an inspector in a waggon on premises not occupied by B. and was condemned. It had been delivered at barracks under a contract with B. and rejected as unsound. B. admitted ownership and declared that the meat was good ; he also wired to the medical officer to keep it for further examination on his behalf, and subsequently said that he would have been prepared to sell it if it had not been seized :—Held, sufficient to justify a conviction for having had the meat in his possession at the time of seizure (Bull v. Lord (1911), 9 L. G. R. 829 ; and see also Williams v. Allen to note (e) of last section). The word " possession " in this section must be construed in a popular and not in a narrow sense. See Webb v. Baker, [1916] 2 K. B. 753 ; 80 J. P. 449. In that case a quantity of rabbits packed in wooden boxes were despatched from London to a workhouse for human consumption. On the following day the cases were opened and the rabbits were found to be in such a state of putrefaction that they were duly condemned and destroyed. It was held that at the time of their seizure the goods were not in the possession of the vendor.

The Glasgow Police Amendment Act, 1890, gives power to seize diseased or unsound meat intended for human consumption and exposed for sale, and by s. 20 renders liable in a penalty the person to whom the same belongs, or in whose possession, or on whose premises the same was found. A complaint charging a person with having been found in possession of diseased meat intended for sale for human consumption set forth that the meat was seized in a barrow belonging to the accused, driven by his servant, and under his orders:—Held, that there was a relevant averment of "possession" by the accused (Neilson v. Parkhill (1892), 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.), J. C. 24).

Upon similar provisions in Scotch Acts it has been held that when a person is charged with having in his possession for human food any meat which is unsound, it is not necessary to prove that he knew of its being on his premises, or of its unsound condition (Dickson v. Linton (1888), 15 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.), J. C. 76). Where a farmer sent meat to a consignee in a meat market, and the meat was seized and condemned in the market, it was held that the meat could not be said to be in the farmer's "possession" as and for human food (Cairns v. Linton (1889), 16 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.), J. C. 81).

Possession for sale sufficient without exposure for sale.

A person having in his possession unsound meat intended for sale for the food of man is liable to be convicted under the above section, notwithstanding that he has not exposed the meat for sale (Mallinson v. Carr, [1891] 1 Q. B. 48; 55 J. P. 276; followed in Cork R. D. C. v. Walsh, [1908] 2 I. R. 234). But a person cannot be convicted for having in his possession unsound meat intended for food for himself, his servants, and his workpeople, and not for sale (Rendell v. Hemingway (1898), 14 T. L. R. 456). Mallinson v. Carr, supra, was distinguished in a case where the facts were as follows: On a Monday morning an inspector visited a butcher's shop which was being cleansed, there being one customer in it. The inspector found a closed safe in the shop; on being opened it was found to contain, besides a quantity of sound meat, some pieces which showed signs of decomposition. It was proved that the safe had not been opened since midnight on the preceding Saturday, and that, in the ordinary course of business, the meat would have been examined after the shop was cleansed before setting it out for sale. It was held that there was no evidence that the meat was deposited for sale, and was intended for the food of man (Wieland v. Butler-Hogan (1904), 73 L. J. K. B. 513; 68 J. P. 310).

Liability of vendor under P. H. (London) A., 1891.

It may be noticed that neither this Act nor the P. H. A., 1890, contains any provision similar to that in the P. H. (London) A., 1891, s. 47 (3), which provides as follows: "Where it is shown that any article liable to be seized under this section, and found in the possession of any person was purchased by him from another person for the food of man, and when so purchased was in such a condition as to be liable to be seized and condemned under this section, the person who so sold the same shall be liable to the fine and imprisonment above-mentioned, unless he proves that at the time he sold the said article he did not know, and had no reason to believe, that it was in such condition." This sub-section was considered in Grivell v. Malpas, [1906] 2 K. B. 32; 70 J. P. 334. There, an inspector found hanging in the doorway of a butcher some diseased meat, which was taken away by him and condemned by a magistrate. No proceedings were taken against the butcher, as the meat was not exposed for sale, and would not have been sold until passed by the inspector. It had shortly before the visit of the inspector been delivered by the respondent, a wholesale dealer. In a summons against the respondent under the above sub-section:—Held, that the words "liable to be seized" meant "primâ facie liable to be seized at the time of the sale by the wholesale dealer by reason of its condition," and that it was not necessary that it should have been sold or exposed for sale, or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale, or of preparation for sale, by the person who had bought it from the original vendor. Condemnation by a magistrate is apparently not a condition precedent to a prosecution under this sub-section. See Hewett v. Hattersley, p. 225, post, especially per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J. In R. v. Ascanio Puck & Co., Ltd. (1912), 76 J. P. 487; 29 T. L. R. 11, ROWLATT, J., held that s. 47 (3) does not apply to a case where a purchaser of food which proves to be bad voluntarily gives it up to an inspector. See also as to this sub-section, R. v. Dennis, [1894] 2 Q. B. 458; 58 J. P. 622; Billing v. Prebble, ante, p. 223.

Accessories.

Persons aiding and abetting the exposure of unsound meat are liable to punishment under s. 5 of the S. J. A., 1848. As to what amounts to aiding and abetting the exposure of unsound meat for sale, see Callow v. Tillstone (1900), 83 L. T. 411).

Note to Section 117.

(e) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post. Upon the hearing of a summons under this section it is not necessary to show that the defendant had personal knowledge of the condition of the meat, etc. seized (Blaker v. Tillstone, [1894] 1 Q. B. 345; 58 J. P. 184). Mens rea is not an element of the offence; and an offence is committed even though reasonable examination would not have disclosed the unsoundness (Hobbs v. Winchester Corporation, p. 222, ante; Cork R. D. C. v. Walsh, [1908] 2 I. R. 234; Dickson v. Linton, p. 224, ante. But a defendant may escape by showing that meat would have been examined before any exposure for sale, and would have been rejected if found to be bad; in such a case it could not be said to be "deposited for sale and intended for human food," cf. Wieland v. Butler-Hogan, p. 224, ante. The justice inflicting the penalty need not be the justice who issued the summons (R. v. Thomas (1901), 18 T. L. R. 71).

Mens rea not essential.

Where a medical officer has seized unsound meat and procured its condemnation under ss. 116, 117, a police officer, not being a "person aggrieved" within the meaning of s. 253, post, cannot institute proceedings for a penalty without authority from the council, or the consent of the Attorney-General (Dodd v. Pearson, [1911] 2 K. B. 383; 75 J. P. 343). Under the London Act the position is, however, different. A sanitary inspector, purporting to act on behalf of the sanitary authority, laid an information under s. 47 (2) of the P. H. (London) A., 1891, against the appellant for having on his premises unsound meat intended for the use of man. The inspector had no express authority to take proceedings:—Held, that a private individual may take proceedings under that section: that, therefore, it was unnecessary for an inspector to have any authority, and that the words in the information "on behalf of the borough council" could be rejected as surplusage (Giebler v. Manning, [1906] 1 K. B. 709; 70 J. P. 181; cf. Lake v. Smith (1912), 76 J. P. 71, and see also Kates v. Jeffery (1914), 3 K. B. 160; 78 J. P. 310).

Who may prosecute.

The respondent exposed for sale part of a cow which had died of disease, and sold the meat to a customer, who took it home for food, and some days afterwards, at the request of an inspector of nuisances, handed it over to him; it was then condemned by a justice as unfit for food. It was held that the meat was not "so seized" as is prescribed by s. 116, and that for that reason the respondent could not be convicted under this section (Vinter v. Hind (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 63; 47 J. P. 373). But where the P. H. A., 1890, Part III., has been adopted, s. 28 provides that a justice may condemn any article and order it to be destroyed or disposed of under the above section if satisfied on complaint made to him that such article is diseased, unsound, or unwholesome, or unfit for the food of man, although the same has not been seized as mentioned in s. 116; and in such a district seizure in accordance with s. 116 is no longer a condition precedent to a prosecution (Salt v. Tomlinson, [1911] 2 K. B. 391; 75 J. P. 398). In this case the facts were practically the same as in Vinter v. Hind. A person, without exposing it for sale sold a live bullock to a butcher knowing that he intended to use it for human food. After killing and cutting up it was hung in the slaughter house, and was there seized and condemned. On an appeal by the vendor against a conviction it was held that the conviction could not stand as there had been no exposure for sale and also because the article which had been seized and condemned was not the article which had been sold by him (Bothamley v. Jolly, [1915] 3 K. B. 425; 31 T. L. R. 626). It has been decided in a case where an inspector of the Fishmongers' Company himself destroyed unsound fish, that condemnation by a magistrate is not a condition precedent to a prosecution under s. 47 (2) of the London Act (Hewett v. Hattersley, [1912] 3 K. B. 35; 76 J. P. 369). It would seem that the same rule should hold good in districts where s. 28 of the Act of 1890 is in force, post.

Necessity for "seizure" in accordance with s. 116.

In Vinter v. Hind, supra, STEPHEN, J., expressed an opinion that the defendant cannot, in a prosecution under this section, call evidence to show that the meat which has been condemned was in fact sound. But this dictum was expressly overruled in Waye v. Thompson (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 342; 49 J. P. 693.

Defence of soundness.

(f) Each separate exposure of a piece of bad meat is a separate offence in respect of which a penalty and costs can be imposed (In re Hartley (1862), 31 L. J. M. C. 232; 26 J. P. 438). So, too, under the slightly different words of the Scotch Act Cumulative penalties.

Note to Section 117. ten penalties were imposed in respect of ten separate portions into which a carcase had been cut (Kenn v. Bell, [1910] S. C. (J.) 13).

Penalty for hindering officer from inspecting meat, etc.

118. Any person who in any manner prevents (a) any medical officer of health or inspector of nuisances from entering any premises (b) and inspecting any animal carcase meat poultry game flesh fish fruit vegetables corn bread flour or milk exposed or deposited for the purpose of sale, or of preparation for sale, and intended for the food of man, or who obstructs or impedes (a) any such medical officer or inspector or his assistant, when carrying into execution the provisions of this Act, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds (c).

(a) See Small v. Bickley, ante, p. 218, as to what does not amount to a preventing, etc. under this section. There must be some active step in the way of prevention or obstruction. See the next section as to search warrants by justices.

(b) See the definition in s. 4, ante, p. 7.

(c) See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post.

Search warrant may be granted by a justice.

119. On complaint made on oath (a) by a medical officer of health, or by an inspector of nuisances, or other officer of a local authority, any justice may grant a warrant to any such officer to enter any building or part of a building in which such officer has reason for believing that there is kept or concealed (b) any animal carcase meat poultry game flesh fish fruit vegetables corn bread flour or milk which is intended for sale for the food of man, and is diseased unsound or unwholesome, or unfit for the food of man; and to search for seize and carry away any such animal or other article in order to have the same dealt with by a justice under the provisions of this Act.

Any person who obstructs (c) any such officer in the performance of his duty under such warrant shall, in addition to any other punishment to which he may be subject, be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds (d).

(a) As to "oaths," see note (h) to s. 102, p. 189, ante.

(b) This clause appears to apply to cases where articles are not actually exposed for sale, and it is difficult to allege that they are deposited for the purpose of sale in the terms of s. 116, ante, p. 218. If the officer suspects concealment he cannot enter forcibly until he obtains a warrant under this section.

No penalty is imposed in this case for the mere concealment of the article. To subject the party to a penalty there must have been an exposure for sale or some other act such as is made an offence by one of the previous sections.

Common law liability for exposing or selling unsound food.

As to the common law offence of knowingly exposing for sale in a public market unsound and unwholesome meat, see R. v. Stevenson (1862), 3 F. & F. 106, where it was held that a meat salesman might be indicted and convicted at common law for knowingly sending or exposing meat for sale in a public market as fit for human food, when in fact it was not so. See also R. v. Jarvis, ib. 108, and cf. Hewett v. Hattersley, p. 225, ante. But in R. v. Crawley (1862), 3 F. & F. 109, it was held that a person is not indictable for sending to a meat salesman meat which he knows to be unfit for human food, if he does not know and does not intend that it is to be sold as human food.

It was held in Burnby v. Bollett (1847), 16 M. & W. 644, that a private person, not being a dealer or trader, selling food, was not, in the absence of fraud or a warranty, liable to an action for damages, if the food was unwholesome. And even in the case of a dealer the law was apparently the same. Thus, it was held that the sale of a carcase by a meat salesman, with a latent taint of which he was ignorant, and which he had no means of knowing, did not make him liable, nor import any warranty that the meat was fit for human food (Everton or Emmerton v. Matthews (1862), 31 L. J. Ex. 139 ; 26 J. P. 566). But now as to implied warranties in certain cases, see the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 14 (1) (2). Under this section it was held in Frost v. Aylesbury Dairy Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 608, that there was an implied warranty by a dairy company of the wholesomeness of their milk ; and in other cases damages have been recovered under the same section for the sale of bad food or liquor ; see Wren v. Holt, [1903] 1 K. B. 610 ; 67 J. P. 191 (beer) ; Wallis v. Russell, [1902] 2 I. R. 585 (shell-fish) ; Jackson v. Watson, [1909] 2 K. B. 193 (tinned fish). In the last-mentioned case it was held that a husband could recover damages for the loss sustained in his wife's death by poisoning. See also Crage v. Fry, Cointat v Myham & Son, on p. 222, ante, and Skeate v. Slaters, Ltd. (1914), 110 L. T. 604.

As to the common law liability of a person selling a dangerous substance to one ignorant of the danger, see George v. Skivington (1869), L. R. 5 Ex. 1 ; and Clarke v. Army and Navy Co-op. Society, [1903] 1 K. B. 155 (sales of chemical compounds).

See further as to the sale of unwholesome meat and provisions, the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, s. 15, in App. I., and the Acts relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs, also in App. I. See also Shillito v. Thompson, ante, p. 219, as to liability for selling unwholesome food contrary to a byelaw of a municipal corporation.

(c) As to the meaning of the word "obstructs," see Swallow v. L. C. C., [1916] 1 K. B. 224 ; 80 J. P. 164, which was a decision under s. 27, sub-s. (2) of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889.

(d) See, as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post.

INFECTIOUS DISEASES AND HOSPITALS (a).

Provision against Infection.

Duty of local authority to cause premises to be cleansed and disinfected (b),

120. Where any local authority are of opinion, on the certificate of their medical officer of health or of any other legally qualified medical practitioner (c), that the cleansing and disinfecting of any house or part thereof, and of any articles therein likely to retain infection, would tend to prevent or check infectious disease, it shall be the duty of such authority (d) to give notice (e) in writing to the owner or occupier (f) of such house or part thereof requiring him to cleanse and disinfect such house or part thereof and articles within a time specified in such notice (g).

If the person to whom notice is so given fails to comply therewith, he shall be liable to a penalty of not less than one shilling and not exceeding ten shillings (h) for every day during which he continues to make default ; and the local authority shall cause such house or part thereof and articles to be cleansed and disinfected, and may recover the expenses incurred from the owner or occupier in default in a summary manner.

Where the owner or occupier of any such house or part thereof is from poverty or otherwise unable, in the opinion of the local authority, effectually to carry out the requirements of this section, such authority may, without enforcing such requirements on such owner or occupier, with his consent cleanse and disinfect such house or part thereof and articles, and defray the expenses thereof (i).

Subsequent legislation.

(a) The provisions of this part of the Act are extended to canal boats by the Canal Boats Acts, which are set out in App. I., post, Vol. II.

This part of the Act has also been greatly extended and amended by subsequent legislation: The Epidemic and other Diseases Prevention Act, 1883; The Public Health (Ships) Act, 1885; the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889; The Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890; The Isolation Hospitals Act, 1893; The Public Health (Ports) Act, 1896; The Infectious Disease (Notification) Extension Act, 1899; The Isolation Hospitals Act, 1901; the Public Health Act, 1904; The Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907; and The Public Health (Prevention and Treatment of Disease) Act, 1913. All these Acts (except the Isolation Hospitals Acts which are set out in App. I., post) are set out, post, but in the notes to the several sections of the Act of 1875 reference is made to the several alterations and amendments of the law so far as these affect each section of that Act.

Substituted and additional provisions.

(b) In any district where the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 5, is in force by adoption, the provisions thereof are substituted for those of this section (s. 120). See s. 5 and notes thereto, post. See also ss. 56 and 66 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, which (when applied to any district) give further powers to an authority with respect to the cleansing, etc. of premises and articles therein.

Port sanitary authorities now act under s. 5 of the Act of 1890, and not under this section (Order of August 20th, 1912, made under the Public Health (Ports) Act, 1896, post).

Provision of temporary accommodation.

In any district where the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 15, is in force by adoption, "the local authority shall from time to time provide, free of charge, temporary shelter or house accommodation with any necessary attendants for the members of any family in which any infectious disease has appeared, who have been compelled to leave their dwellings for the purpose of enabling such dwellings to be disinfected by the local authority."

Further, in any district to which the P. H. A., 1907, s. 61, has been applied by Order of the L. G. B. or M. of H.

"(1) The local authority may exercise the powers of section fifteen of the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, whether that section has or has not been adopted in the district, and, where the local authority so determine, those powers may be exercised for providing temporary shelter or house accommodation with any necessary attendants for any person who, in any case to which this section applies, leaves a house after any infectious disease has appeared therein, and the local authority may borrow, subject to the provisions of the Public Health Acts, for the purpose of providing shelter or house accommodation under section fifteen of the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, or under this section.

"Where the local authority in pursuance of the aforesaid powers have provided a temporary shelter or house accommodation, they may, on the appearance of any infectious disease in a house, and on the certificate of the medical officer, cause any person who is not himself sick and who consents to leave the house, or whose parent or guardian (where the person is a child) consents to his leaving the house, to be removed therefrom to any such temporary shelter or house accommodation, and in the like case on the like certificate may cause any such person who does not consent to leave the house to be removed therefrom to any such temporary shelter or house accommodation, where two justices, on the application of the local authority and on being satisfied of the necessity of the removal, make an order for the removal, subject to such conditions (if any) as are imposed by the order.

"The local authority shall in every case cause the removal to be effected and the conditions of any order to be satisfied without charge to the person removed or to the parent or guardian of that person.

"(2) Any person who wilfully disobeys or obstructs the execution of an order under this section, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds.

"(3) For the purpose of this section the word 'house' includes any tent, van, shed, or similar structure used for human habitation or any boat lying in any canal or other water within the district of the local authority and used for the like purpose."

Medical certificate.

(c) This means a registered medical practitioner. See note (c) to s. 114, ante, p. 216. For a form of certificate, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 402.

Duty of authority.

(d) This is imperative. Reference may also be made to the Vaccination Act, 1867, s. 28, with reference to the spread of small-pox, and to the Acts mentioned in note (a), supra. But a sanitary authority have no specific legal interest entitling them to a mandamus directing the local guardians to enforce the Vaccination Acts (R. v. Lewisham Union, [1897] 1 Q. B. 498; 61 J. P. 151). Note to Section 120.

(e) As to authentication and service of this notice, see ss. 266, 267, post. It should be given by the authority itself, and not by an officer upon his own initiative. A notice given by an officer could apparently not be ratified so as to support a summons for non-compliance (St. Leonard, Shoreditch v. Holmes (1885), 50 J. P. 132, and see also per AVORY, J., in Bowyer, Philpott & Payne v. Mather, [1919] 1 K. B. 419; 83 J. P. 50). For a form of notice, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 403. Notice.

(f) The authority may select either the owner or the occupier, but the owner will often be unable to execute the direction, and this should be considered before it is decided to serve the notice on him. For definition of "owner," see s. 4, ante, p. 8. Person liable.

(g) Section 46, ante, p. 115, provides for the cleansing of houses in a filthy condition where, on the certificate of any two medical practitioners, it appears to the authority that the health of any person is affected or endangered, or where such cleansing would tend to prevent or check infectious disease. See also ss. 80 and 84, ante, pp. 156, 158, as to giving notices and taking precautions in case of infectious disease in a common lodging-house, and s. 90, ante, p. 161, which provides for the making of byelaws as to houses let in lodgings. Cleansing of houses.

The Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, post, as extended by the Infectious Disease (Notification) Extension Act, 1899, post, is now in force in all districts throughout the country, and affords to local authorities means of knowledge of every case of infectious disease to which that Act applies.

(h) See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post. Although the text provides for a fine of not less than 1*s*., it may be still further reduced under the S. J. A., 1879, s. 4.

(i) For forms of request for consent and of consent, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 404. Where an authority themselves carried out the work of disinfection, and in so doing necessarily damaged some articles, and intentionally destroyed others, it was held that they were liable to compensate the owner, provided he was not "in default," and that the absence of the medical officer's certificate, and of the written notice, provided for by the section, was immaterial, where the owner assented to the authority's proceedings (Foster v. East Westmoreland R. D. C. (1903), 68 J. P. 103 (a county court case)). The latter part of this decision may, perhaps, be open to question. See a leading article in 68 J. P. N., at p. 519. Compensation for damage done.

It is very desirable that the work of disinfection should be carried out under proper supervision. It is not a duty of an inspector of nuisances, but in practice the work is usually done by him for additional remuneration. In cases in which s. 5 of the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, applies, it may become the duty of officers of the local authority to cleanse and disinfect a house under the superintendence of the medical officer of health.

121. Any local authority may direct the destruction of any bedding clothing or other articles which have been exposed to infection from any dangerous (a) infectious disorder, and may give compensation for the same (b). Destruction of infected bedding, etc.

A form of order giving such a direction will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 405.

As regards ships, see the Public Health (Ships) Act, 1885, post. Additional provisions.

Under the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 6, post (if in force by adoption), an authority may require the owner of bedding, etc., which has been exposed to infection, to hand the same over to an officer for disinfection, and the bedding, etc. is then to be disinfected and returned, compensation being made for any unnecessary damage done.

The present section does not authorise an authority to make any charge for the work of destroying infected articles when they act on their own initiative; but where an authority performed such work at the owner's request, the L. G. B. expressed the view that the authority would probably be held to be entitled to recover any reasonable expenses incurred by them.

(a) This word restricts the application of the section to the class of infectious disorders which endangers life. There is a definition of "dangerous infectious disease" in the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, s. 6, post. See as to common lodging-houses, ss. 80, 84, ante, pp. 156, 158, and as to houses let in lodgings, s. 90, ante, p. 161.

Unauthorised acts of officers.

A medical officer of health has no power, virtute officii, to order the destruction of infected clothing, at any rate not except in cases of great urgency (Garlick v. Knottingley U. D. C. (1904), 68 J. P. 494; 2 L. G. R. 1345). It was suggested in the last-mentioned case that, under exceptional circumstances calling for prompt action, the medical officer might be justified in acting upon his own initiative, and one of the learned judges expressed the opinion that in any case an authority might adopt and ratify his act so as to render it for all purposes their own.

The medical officer of health of an Irish district (in which neither the Infectious Disease (Notification) Act, 1889, nor the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, had been adopted), acting upon a medical certificate that a dangerous infectious disease existed in a house, ordered the immediate destruction of all property in the house without any previous communication to, or subsequent ratification by, the sanitary authority. It was held, (1) that the authority were not liable to the owner in trespass, for the medical officer had not acted within the scope of his authority; and (2) that had he been authorised under ss. 137 and 138 of the P. H. (Ireland) A., 1878, the remedy would have been an arbitration under s. 274 of the Act (Farrell v. Longford U. D. C. (1909), 43 Ir. L. T. 183).

Compensation.

(b) See s. 308, post, but observe that compensation under that section is limited to cases where the person who suffers damage is not himself in default. It will be observed that the word "may" is used, but it would probably be construed as imposing a duty, and not merely as conferring an option (Julius v. Bishop of Oxford (1880), 5 App. Cas. 214; 44 J. P. 600; Gray v. St. Andrew's and Cupar Committees, [1911] S. C. 266; Garlick v. Knottingley U. D. C., supra; and see also Foster v. East Westmoreland R. D. C., p. 229, ante). The expenses incurred under these sections in urban districts are payable out of the general district fund (s. 207, post); in rural districts they constitute general expenses (s. 229, post).

Provision of means of disinfection.

122. Any local authority may provide a proper place, with all necessary apparatus and attendance, for the disinfection of bedding clothing or other articles which have become infected, and may cause any articles brought for disinfection to be disinfected free of charge.

See the preceding section and the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 6, as to the disinfection of bedding, clothing, or other articles which have been exposed to infection.

The section is distinctly permissive, not obligatory, and if a local authority do not avail themselves of their powers, s. 7 of the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1885, does not (in the opinion of the M. of H.) enable a statutory complaint to be brought under s. 299 of the Act of 1875.

It is the usual practice of the M. of H. to require that any building which is intended to contain infected persons or things should be situated at a distance of not less than forty feet from the boundary of the site. A relaxation of the rule is, however, permitted if the circumstances are exceptional, as in the case of some large towns where a sufficiently large site is difficult to obtain. In the case of the provision of ambulance sheds the Ministry sometimes approve a site with a smaller zone than forty feet if the local authority are willing to give them an undertaking that the ambulance shall always be disinfected after use before being placed in the shed.

A local authority proposed to provide in connection with a disinfecting station baths for the use of persons who had been in contact with infectious disease while their clothes were being disinfected. The L. G. B. held, however, that there was no statutory authority for expenditure of this kind.

Two or more local authorities may combine under s. 285 of this Act or under s. 57 of the L. G. A., 1894, for the provision of a joint disinfecting station and plant. A local authority cannot, however, in the opinion of the M. of H., combine with a board of guardians for the purpose. The former should provide the apparatus and then agree with the guardians for the reception of articles for disinfection.

If an authority propose to provide a disinfecting apparatus outside their district, they should obtain the consent of the neighbouring authority under s. 285.

Note to Section 122.

123. Any local authority may provide and maintain a carriage or carriages suitable for the conveyance of persons suffering under any infectious disorder, and may pay the expense of conveying therein any person so suffering to a hospital or other place of destination.

Provision of conveyance for infected persons.

See also ss. 121 and 122 and notes thereto. And as to ambulances in connection with isolation hospitals, see the Isolation Hospitals Act, 1893, s. 13, in App. I., post, Vol. II. It will be noted that s. 123 does not enable an authority to provide an ambulance for accident cases; but this power is now obtainable under the P. H. A., 1907, s. 50. As to ambulances for accidents and non-infectious cases in London, see the Metropolitan Ambulances Act, 1909.

An authority outside London has apparently no power to provide a conveyance for taking persons home upon discharge from an infectious diseases hospital.

As to the power of the Metropolitan Asylums Board to provide ambulances in the metropolis, see the P. H. (London) A., 1891, s. 79. Carriages provided by the asylum managers may be used for conveying patients to and from hospitals other than those provided by such managers.

The M. of H. consider that a local authority have no power to contribute to the funds of an ambulance brigade. See, however, the notes to s. 50 of the Act of 1907 as to an arrangement which may be equivalent to a "provision."

No carriage duty is payable in respect of a motor ambulance. See Finance Act, 1920, 10 & 11 Geo. 5, c. 18, s. 13 (4).

124. Where any suitable hospital or place (a) for the reception of the sick is provided within the district of a local authority, or within a convenient distance of such district, any person who is suffering from any dangerous (b) infectious disorder, and is without proper lodging or accommodation (c), or lodged in a room occupied by more than one family (d), or is on board any ship or vessel (e), may, on a certificate signed by a legally qualified medical practitioner (f), and with the consent of the superintending body of such hospital or place (g), be removed, by order of any justice (h), to such hospital or place at the cost of the local authority; and any person so suffering, who is lodged in any common lodging-house (i), may, with the like consent and on a like certificate, be so removed by order of the local authority.

An order under this section may be addressed to such constable or officer of the local authority as the justice or local authority (k) making the same may think expedient; and any person who wilfully disobeys or obstructs (l) the execution of such order shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds (m).

Removal of infected persons without proper lodging to hospital by order of justice.

For forms of medical certificate and of order by an authority for use under this section, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., pp. 330, 331.

As regards ships, see the Public Health (Ships) Act, 1885, post. See also Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 8, which prohibits in certain cases the retaining of the body of a person who has died of infectious disease; s. 9, which prohibits the removal from a hospital of such a body except for burial; s. 10, which enables a justice to make an order for the removal of a dead body; and s. 12, which enables a justice to order the detention in a hospital of a person suffering from infectious disease who has no proper lodging.

(a) This word is very general, and has been construed to apply to the infirmary or sick wards of a workhouse. 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, s. 27, required the place to be within the district; this restriction is removed, and it may be without the district if within a convenient distance. It will be for the justices to decide whether the place is suitable when making the order.

(b) There are several infectious diseases which are not of themselves dangerous and do not require this special interposition. See note (a) to s. 121, ante, p. 230.

"Without proper lodging."

(c) The fact that a scarlet fever patient is lodged in the parlour of a four-roomed house, the other three rooms being occupied by the rest of the family, is in itself sufficient evidence that he is without proper lodging or accommodation to justify an order under this section, for although it provides primarily for the protection of the patient, it is also directed to the protection of other persons (Warwick v. Graham, [1899] 2 Q. B. 191; 63 J. P. 599).

In districts to which the P. H. A., 1907, s. 65, post, has been applied, s. 124, supra, will extend to all cases of persons suffering from any dangerous infectious disease, and being in or upon any house or premises where such persons cannot be effectually isolated so as to prevent the spread of the disease. See also s. 67 of the same Act as to providing nurses.

(d) As to the ambiguity of this word, see note (a) to s. 77, ante, p. 154.

(e) See as to persons suffering from infectious disease in canal boats, the provisions of the Canal Boats Acts in App. I., post, Vol. II.

Medical certificate.

(f) I.e., one registered under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 34, and 49 & 50 Vict. c. 48, s. 27. As to the certificate, see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 37. For a form of certificate, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 405; for a form of order upon which the order of removal might be framed, see ibid., p. 310.

(g) It is presumed that a general consent will suffice, otherwise the removal would be in many cases impracticable.

Illegal or negligent removal

(h) A child suffering from scarlet fever was removed to a hospital by an officer of the local authority without the consent of the father, and without any magisterial order having been obtained under the corresponding s. 42 of the P. H. (Scotland) A., 1867. The child died shortly after its admission and the father sued the authority for damages, alleging that its death had been caused by the negligent manner of its removal:—Held, that as the removal had not been effected under s. 42, supra, the defendants were not protected by s. 118 (corresponding to s. 265 of this Act) (Mitchell v. Aberdeen (Magistrates of) (1893), 20 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 253). In another case precisely similar, except that the father's consent to the removal had been obtained, the same conclusion was arrived at (Sutherland v. Aberdeen (Magistrates of) (1894), 22 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 95; 32 Sc. L. R. 81).

(i) See s. 84, ante, p. 158. The provision referring to common lodging-houses was new.

(k) These words are to be read reddendo singula singulis. The justice is to determine when he makes the order, and the local authority when they make it.

The patient has no option as to his removal, if an order be made.

(l) As to the meaning of the word "obstructs," see Swallow v. L. C. C., [1916] 1 K. B. 224; 80 J. P. 164.

Conclusiveness of order.

(m) In Booker v. Taylor (1882), Times, Nov. 21st, an order was made for the removal of a child under this section. The mother resisted the removal, and was summoned for so doing. At the hearing the magistrates, considering the order to be invalid, declined to convict. It was held that they had no right to go behind the order and examine into its validity; and that they were bound to convict if there had been obstruction. This decision was followed in R. v. Davey, Ex parte Bishop, [1899] 2 Q. B. 301; 63 J. P. 515).

Removal to hospital

125. Any local authority may make regulations (a) (to be approved of by the Local Government Board) for removing to any hospital to which such authority are entitled to remove patients (b), and for keeping in such hospital so long as may be necessary, any persons brought within their district by any ship or boat who are infected with a dangerous infectious disorder; and such regulations may impose on offenders against the same reasonable penalties not exceeding forty shillings for each offence (c). Section 125. of infected persons brought by ships.

As regards ships, see the Public Health (Ships) Act, 1885, post.

(a) The M. of H. have model regulations; in these the expression "dangerous infectious disorder" is defined as meaning any one of the following diseases: Small-pox, diphtheria, membranous croup, scarlatina or scarlet fever, typhus fever, typhoid or enteric fever, relapsing fever, and continued fever. As to publication of regulations see s. 188, post.

(c) See as to the recovery of penalties, s. 251, post.

126. Any person (a) who— Penalty on exposure of infected persons and things.

(1) While suffering from any dangerous (b) infectious disorder wilfully exposes himself without proper precautions (c) against spreading the said disorder in any street public place shop inn (d) or public conveyance (e), or enters any public conveyance without previously notifying to the owner conductor or driver thereof that he is so suffering; or

(2) Being in charge of any person (f) so suffering, so (c) exposes such sufferer (g); or shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds (i); and a person who, while suffering from any such disorder, enters any public conveyance without previously notifying to the owner or driver that he is so suffering, shall in addition be ordered by the court to pay such owner and driver the amount of any loss and expense they may incur in carrying into effect the provisions of this Act with respect to the disinfection of the conveyance (k).

Provided that no proceedings under this section shall be taken against persons transmitting with proper precautions any bedding clothing rags or other things for the purpose of having the same disinfected (l).

(a) It has been held an indictable offence to expose unnecessarily in public streets persons infected with smallpox, whether produced by inoculation or otherwise (R. v. Vantandillo (1815), 4 M. & S. 73; R. v. Burnett (1815), 4 M. & S. 272). These were cases of exposing children; the text applies not only to such cases but to adults exposing themselves. Common law liability.

In Best v. Stapp or Staff (1872), 2 C. P. D. 191 n., a person took a child to a lodging-house without disclosing that it was recovering from smallpox. Two children of the lodging-house keeper caught the disease and died; and their father succeeded in an action for damages. Whether, if there had been no knowledge on the part of the lodger, the action could have been maintained, quære. And see also Gwynne v. Clark (1913), 77 J. P. N. 172, where this decision was followed in a case of pulmonary consumption.

Note to Section 126.

In Humphreys v. Miller (1916), 32 T. L. R. 524, an action was brought by a lodging-house keeper against the executors of one, deceased, who was a leper, and who had occupied rooms in the plaintiff's house. It was claimed that there was an implied warranty on the part of the deceased for a breach of which the defendants were liable. It was held that on taking furnished lodgings there was no implied warranty by the lessee that the tenant was a fit and proper person to occupy them.

As to the liability of a hospital authority who discharge a patient before he is free from infection, see note (b) to s. 131, post, p. 239.

(b) See s. 124, note (b), ante, p. 232.

"Proper precautions."

(c) A medical man in practice at T. sent a scarlet fever patient to the fever hospital there with a certificate, directing him to walk in the middle of the road and not to talk to any one, but in consequence of an alleged informality in the certificate, the patient was refused admission. Thereupon the medical man walked with him through the streets to the residence of the chairman of the local board, from whom, after some delay, he obtained an order for the man's admission. He then returned with the patient to the police station to procure the ambulance. On an information against the medical man under this sub-section, the justices were of opinion that it was not proved that he "had charge of" the patient, that he had not wilfully exposed the patient in any street or public place "without proper precaution," and that he had made the best use of the means at his disposal to prevent the spread of the fever, and they refused to convict. It was held that they were right (Tunbridge Wells Local Board v. Bisshopp (1877), 2 C. P. D. 187). In Malloch v. Hunter (1894), 21 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.), J. C. 22, a medical practitioner was charged under the corresponding section (s. 149) of the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1867, for that he, being the person in charge of A. B., a person suffering from enteric fever, being an infectious disorder, did wilfully expose him while so suffering by placing him in a cab and conveying him from his lodgings to a hospital without taking proper precautions against spreading the disorder. The cab being a public conveyance was furnished with leather fittings, but there was no evidence as to what other precautions were necessary. The magistrate convicted the accused:—Held, on appeal (1) that no offence was committed unless the patient was conveyed without proper precautions; (2) that the onus lay on the prosecutor to prove what precautions were necessary, and that they had not been used; (3) that as the prosecutor had failed to discharge this onus the conviction must be quashed.

(d) As to what is an inn, see s. 128, note (c), post, p. 236.

"Public conveyance."

(e) A public conveyance appears to be one which plies openly and publicly for passengers. A fly which is hired from an innkeeper or jobmaster may possibly not be within the provisions of the section. See also as to public conveyances, s. 127, post, p. 235, and notes thereto.

"Person."

(f) This person may be an adult, it seems, as well as a child. But probably (see note (h), infra) it would not include a dead person. See, however, the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 11, in notes to next section.

(g) In districts to which the P. H. A., 1907, s. 62, post, has been applied, this paragraph is to be read as if the words "or causes or permits such sufferer to be so exposed" were added after the word "sufferer."

(h) During epidemics of cholera in Egypt, France, and the Black Sea ports, the L. G. B. issued regulations under s. 130 for the disinfection of rags from those countries. And see 59 & 60 Vict. c. 19, and 4 Edw. 7, c. 16, post.

Conveyances and disinfection.

It is presumed that this sub-section would cover the case of a fly hired for the conveyance of an infected person and subsequently let for hire without previous disinfection. From an answer given in Parliament by the President of the L. G. B., on February 23rd, 1886, it would appear to be the opinion of the department that the provisions of this section do not extend to the removal in a public conveyance of the dead body of a person who has died of an infectious disorder. Such a case is not provided for by the Act, but see the notes to s. 127, p. 235, post.

(i) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post.

(k) See the next section and the P. H. A., 1907, ss. 63, 64, set out thereunder. It will be observed that s. 126, supra, applies only to a "public" conveyance, as to which see note (e), supra. If a non-public conveyance was used without notification by a person suffering from infectious disease, the owner could probably recover as damages the expenses of its disinfection, on the principle of the decision in Best v. Stapp or Staff, ante, p. 233. Note to Section 126.

(l) See s. 122, ante, p. 230, and the provisions of 53 & 54 Vict. c. 34, post.

127. Every owner or driver of a public conveyance (a) shall immediately provide for the disinfection of such conveyance after it has to his knowledge (b) conveyed any person suffering from a dangerous infectious disorder; and if he fails to do so he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds (c); but no such owner or driver shall be required to convey any person so suffering until he has been paid a sum sufficient to cover any loss or expense incurred by him in carrying into effect the provisions of this section (d). Penalty on failing to provide for disinfection of public conveyance.

In a district where the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 11, post, is in force by adoption, "any person who hires or uses a public conveyance other than a hearse for the conveyance of the body of a person who has died from any infectious disease, without previously notifying to the owner or driver of such public conveyance that the person whose body is or is intended to be so conveyed has died from infectious disease, and after any such notification as aforesaid, any owner or driver of a public conveyance, other than a hearse, which has been used for conveying the body of a person who has died from infectious disease, who shall not immediately afterwards provide for the disinfection of such conveyance, shall be guilty of an offence under this Act." Additional statutory provisions.

In districts to which they have been applied, ss. 63 and 64 of the P. H. A., 1907, provide as follows:

Section 63. "The owner or driver of a public vehicle within the district of the local authority used for the carrying of passengers at separate fares shall not knowingly convey or any other person shall not knowingly place in any such public vehicle a person suffering from any infectious disease, or a person suffering from any such disease shall not enter any such vehicle, and every person who shall offend against this section shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings."

Section 64. "(1) If any person suffering from any infectious disease is conveyed in any public vehicle within the district of the local authority the owner or driver thereof as soon as it comes to his knowledge shall give notice to the medical officer, and shall cause such vehicle to be disinfected, and, if he fails so to do, he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds, and the owner or driver of such vehicle shall be entitled to recover in a summary manner from the person so conveyed, or from the person causing that person to be so conveyed, a sufficient sum to cover any loss and expense incurred by him in connection with such disinfection.

"(2) It shall be the duty of the local authority when so requested by the owner or driver of such public vehicle to provide for the disinfection of the same free of charge, except in cases where the owner or driver conveyed a person knowing that he was suffering from infectious disease."

(a) See s. 126, notes (e), (h), and (k).

(b) That is, whether he was aware of the person being infected at the time of conveyance, or only discovered it afterwards. See also ss. 63, 64 of the Act of 1907, supra.

As to the obligation of the owner or driver of a public conveyance to disinfect such conveyance after it has been used for carrying the dead body of a person who has died of infectious disease, see 53 & 54 Vict. c. 34, s. 11, supra.

(c) See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post.

(d) This will be an answer to any proceeding for disobedience of a hackney carriage byelaw, or to proceedings under 10 & 11 Vict. c. 89, s. 52.

128. Any person who knowingly lets for hire any house room or part of a house in which any person has been suffering from any dangerous Penalty on letting houses infectious disorder, without having such house room or part of a house and all articles therein liable to retain infection, disinfected to the satisfaction of a legally qualified medical practitioner (a), as testified by a certificate signed by him, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds (b).

For the purposes of this section, the keeper of an inn shall be deemed to let for hire part of a house to any person admitted as a guest into such inn (c).

As regards ships, see the Public Health (Ships) Act, 1885, post.

(a) I.e., one duly registered under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 34, and 49 & 50 Vict. c. 48, s. 27. As to the certificate, see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 37. For a form of certificate, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 412.

(b) See as to the recovery of this penalty, s. 251, post. Admitting persons to night shelters at a charge of one penny per head per night, is not a letting to hire of the house or part of a house used for that purpose (Colclough v. Edwards (1893), 57 J. P. 772).

(c) An inn is defined to be a house in which travellers, passengers, wayfaring men, and other such like casual guests, are accommodated with lodgings, and whatsoever they reasonably desire for themselves and their horses while on their way (Burn's Justice, Vol. I., p. 64; R. v. Luellin (1700), 12 Mod. 445; Thompson v. Lacy (1820), 3 Barn. & Ald. 283; R. v. Rymer (1877), 2 Q. B. D. 136; 41 J. P. 199). As to the extent of the obligation of an innkeeper to lodge travellers, see Browne v. Brandt, [1902] 1 K. B. 696.

Where the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 7, post, is in force by adoption, a lessor will generally have means of knowing whether infectious disease has existed on the premises or not, for that section imposes a penalty upon persons who cease to occupy any house, room, or part of a house in which any person has within the preceding six weeks been suffering from an infectious disease, unless the house, etc., has first been disinfected, or unless notice of the existence of the disease has been given to the owner of the house, etc. It also imposes a penalty on persons making false answers to questions on the point: see s. 129, and notes thereto.

See also the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, s. 75, and the Housing, Town Planning, etc. Act, 1909, ss. 14, 15 (1), post, Vol. II., and notes thereto, as to implied conditions upon the letting of furnished houses and of unfurnished houses below certain values.

Penalty on persons letting houses making false statements as to infectious disease.

129. Any person letting for hire or showing for the purpose of letting for hire any house or part of a house, who on being questioned by any person negotiating for the hire of such house or part of a house as to the fact of there being or within six weeks previously having been therein any person suffering from any dangerous (a) infectious disorder, knowingly makes a false answer to such question, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a period not exceeding one month (b).

(a) See s. 124, note (b), ante, p. 232.

(b) As to the prosecution for this offence, see s. 251, post.

As to implied conditions in the letting of houses, see note (c) to last section.

In a district where the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 7, post, is in force by adoption, any person ceasing to occupy any house, room, or part of a house, who on being questioned by the owner thereof, or by any person negotiating for the hire of such house, etc., as to the fact of there having within six weeks previously been therein any person suffering from any infectious disease, knowingly makes a false answer to such question, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £10.

130. (a) The Local Government Board may from time to time make alter and revoke such regulations (b) as to the said Board may seem fit, with a view to the treatment of persons affected with cholera, or any other epidemic endemic or infectious disease (c), and preventing the spread of cholera and such other diseases, as well on the seas rivers and waters of the United Kingdom, and on the high seas within three miles of the coasts thereof (d), as on land ; and may declare by what authority or authorities such regulations shall be enforced and executed (e). Regulations so made shall be published in the London Gazette, and such publication shall be for all purposes conclusive evidence of such regulations (f).

Section 130. Power of M. of H. to make regulations.

Any person wilfully neglecting or refusing to obey or carry out or obstructing the execution of any regulation made under this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds (g).

(a) By the P. H. A., 1904, s. 1 (1), the power to make regulations under s. 130, supra, or s. 134, post, p. 246, includes "the power of making regulations authorising measures to be taken for the prevention of danger arising to public health from vessels arriving at any port, and for the prevention of the conveyance of infection by means of any vessel sailing from any port, so far as may be necessary or expedient for the purpose of carrying out any treaty, convention, arrangement or engagement with any foreign country, and the regulations may in particular provide for the recovery of any expenses incurred in disinfection and of any charges authorised to be made by the regulations for the purpose of those regulations or any services performed thereunder, and also for any powers and duties under the regulations being executed and performed by local authorities: Provided that the regulations shall not be made except after consultation with the Board of Trade." See this section, post.

Extension by later Acts of power to make regulations.

By the Public Health (Regulations as to Food) Act, 1907, s. 1 (1), the power of making regulations under s. 130, supra, or s. 134, post, p. 246, includes "the power of making regulations authorising measures to be taken for the prevention of danger arising to public health from the importation, preparation, storage, and distribution of articles of food or drink (other than drugs or water) intended for sale for human consumption, and, without prejudice to the generality of the powers so conferred, the regulations may—

"(a) provide for the examination and taking of samples of any such articles:

"(b) apply, as respects any matters to be dealt with by the regulations, any provision in any Act of Parliament dealing with the like matters, with the necessary modifications and adaptations:

"(c) provide for the recovery of any charges authorised to be made by the regulations for the purpose of the regulations or any services performed thereunder." See this section, post.

As to the metropolis, see note to s. 134, post, p. 246.

As to the exercise of power to make and enforce regulations made under the National Insurance Acts, see O'Neill v. Middlesex Insurance Committee, [1916] 1 K. B. 331 ; 80 J. P. 204.

(b) Under this section, or s. 134, post, p. 246, as extended by the enactments mentioned in the preceding note and note (e), infra, the Board have made Regulations, the text of which will be found in App. II., post, Vol. II.

Existing regulations

(c) As to what diseases are epidemic or endemic, see s. 134, note (a), post, p. 247.

(d) The Quarantine Act, 1825, provided for the performance of quarantine by vessels coming from a place from which "the plague or other infectious disease or distemper highly dangerous to the health of his Majesty's subjects" might be brought, and also for the observance of special precautions in the case of vessels arriving from America or the West Indies during the prevalence of yellow fever or other highly infectious distemper. In practice this provision had in recent years been regarded as applicable only to plague and yellow fever. The P. H. A., 1896,

Former Quarantine Acts.

Note to Section 130.

post, repealed the Act of 1825 and various other enactments relating to quarantine, and the necessary precautions against the introduction of plague and yellow fever, are now taken by port and other riparian sanitary authorities, in the same way as against the introduction of cholera, in accordance with regulations made by the L. G. B. under, so far as England and Wales outside London are concerned, this section and s. 134, post, p. 246.

Enforcement of regulations.

(e) By the P. H. A., 1896, s. 1, post, regulations made in pursuance of s. 130, supra, or s. 134, post, p. 246, may provide for their being enforced and executed by the officers of customs, and the officers and men of the coastguard; for the signals to be hoisted by vessels having any case of epidemic, endemic, or infectious disease on board; and for the questions to be answered by masters, pilots, and other persons, on board any vessel as to cases of such disease on board during the voyage or on the arrival of the vessel, the detention of vessels and persons on board, and the duties to be performed by masters, pilots, and others, on board. The regulations are subject to the consent of the Commissioners of Customs so far as they apply to officers of customs, to the consent of the Admiralty so far as they apply to officers and men of the coastguard, and of the Board of Trade so far as they apply to signals.

For such Regulations, see App. II., post, Vol. II.

By the Public Health (Prevention and Treatment of Disease) Act, 1913 (post), it is made clear that county councils may be entrusted with the enforcement of these Regulations, and by the same Act county councils and sanitary authorities may, with the sanction of the L. G. B., make arrangements for the treatment of tuberculosis.

Proof of regulations.

(f) See s. 135, post, p. 247, and the note thereon. Quære, whether until publication in the Gazette, the regulations will have the force of law.

Penalty for disobedience or obstruction.

(g) The provision imposing penalties was repealed by the P. H. A., 1896, post. By s. 1 (3) of that Act if any person wilfully neglects or refuses to obey or carry out, or obstructs the execution of, any regulation made either under this section or s. 134, post, p. 246, he is liable to a penalty not exceeding £100, and in the case of a continuing offence to a further penalty not exceeding £50 for every day during which the offence continues. Any such penalty, if not recovered under the provisions of the Acts relating to public health, is recoverable by action on behalf of the Crown in the High Court.

Hospitals.

Power of local authority to provide hospitals.

131. Any local authority may (a) provide for the use of the inhabitants (b) of their district hospitals or temporary places for the reception of the sick, and for that purpose may—

Themselves build such hospitals or places of reception (c); or

Contract for the use of any such hospital or part of a hospital or place of reception (d); or

Enter into any agreement with any person having the management of any hospital, for the reception of the sick inhabitants of their district, on payment of such annual or other sum as may be agreed on (e).

Two or more local authorities may combine in providing a common hospital (f).

As regards ships, see the Public Health (Ships) Act, 1885, post.

(a) This word is permissive; the section does not create a duty.

Hospitals outside district.

Under this section an authority may establish a hospital in another district without the consent of the authority of that district (Withington L. B. v. Manchester (Mayor, etc. of), [1893] 2 Ch. 19; 57 J. P. 340). Compare Edinburgh Magistrates v. Leith Magistrates (1896), 23 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 383.

By the Poor Law Act, 1879, s. 14, if it appear to the guardians of any union desirable that any hospital or building vested in them as guardians under the Acts relating to the relief of the poor should be vested in them as the rural sanitary authority of such union, for the reception of persons suffering from any dangerous infectious disorder, the guardians may, by resolution, to be confirmed by order of the L. G. B. (now M. of H.), transfer such hospital or building accordingly, and from and after the date named in the order such hospital or building shall be deemed to be vested in the guardians as the rural sanitary authority of the union, for the use of the inhabitants of the union or part thereof named in the resolution and order. If the hospital is to be for the use of the inhabitants of any part of the union comprised in an urban sanitary district, the order may determine the contribution to be made by the urban sanitary authority of such district towards the maintenance of the hospital or building. Where an urban sanitary district comprises part of the union, and the said hospital or building is not to be for the use of the inhabitants of that part, the order may determine the value of the interest of that part of the union in such hospital or building, and the manner in which such value is to be paid to that part by the residue of the union for whose use the hospital or building is to be kept, and the application of the sum so paid. These provisions are, however, scarcely applicable now that boards of guardians and rural sanitary authorities (rural district councils) are separate bodies, and the M. of H. issue sale orders instead of transfer orders. It is contrary to the practice of the Ministry to sanction such transactions until a rural district council agrees to carry out such alterations of the buildings as the Ministry considers to be necessary.

Hospitals in metropolis.

For the powers of the district asylums boards in the metropolis to provide hospitals, see 30 & 31 Vict. c. 6; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122, s. 35; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 63; 33 & 34 Vict. c. 18, ss. 1, 2; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 108, s. 10; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, ss. 40—42; 42 & 43 Vict. c. 6; 42 & 43 Vict. c. 54, s. 13; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 76, ss. 75—81.

Isolation hospitals.

As to the powers of local authorities to petition county councils for the establishment of isolation hospitals, see the Isolation Hospitals Acts, 1893 and 1901, in App. I., post, Vol. II.

Duties of authority and guardians respectively.

(b) The Act makes no distinction between pauper and non-pauper cases. If, therefore, a district council, in the discharge of their duty of taking precautions against the spread of infectious disease, provide an infectious diseases hospital, this hospital should provide accommodation for the isolation of persons of all classes so infected. See R. v. Rawtenstall (Mayor, etc. of), cited in the notes to s. 132, post, p. 245; but cf. Farquhar v. Isle of Thanet Hospital Board, post, p. 245. The L. G. B. expressed the following views with regard to the treatment of sick paupers: Where a person suffering from illness, including infectious disease, is destitute, it is the duty of the guardians, or, in the interval between their meetings, of the relieving officer, to give such relief as the case may require, and, if necessary, to arrange for the admission of the patient to a hospital. Where, however, such removal of the patient is only required for purposes of isolation, and the person to be removed is not destitute, the guardians have no duty, and the necessary provision should be made by the sanitary authority. The test of the guardians' duty in the matter is the destitution of the patient, and this will not necessarily depend upon his being in the actual receipt of relief, but may consist in his being unable to obtain at his own cost the requisite medical attendance, nursing, and accommodation. Where it devolves upon the guardians to deal with cases of infectious disease they are not restricted to providing for the treatment of such cases in the workhouse. On the contrary, the Board consider it very desirable, where the sanitary authority possess a suitable isolation hospital, that the guardians should arrange with them for the reception and maintenance therein, at the cost of the union, of persons sent there by order of the guardians and their officers, and of persons in respect of whom relief is granted by the guardians, on application, after their admission into the hospital. The agreement may include cases occurring among the inmates of the workhouse.

Workhouse hospitals, on the other hand, are intended exclusively for destitute persons, and guardians are not empowered to admit non-pauper cases, nor to relieve the sanitary authority from the duty of providing accommodation for such cases.

Authority's duty towards patients in hospitals and attendants.

A boy who was treated for scarlet fever in the hospital of a municipal corporation was discharged while still in an infectious state, and communicated the disease to his brothers. In accordance with the rules of the hospital, the boy was discharged by the matron, under the instructions of the visiting physician, a competent medical man. In an action for damages by the father, the jury found that there was a want of due skill and care in the discharge of the boy, and that there was an undertaking by the corporation to the father that their visiting physician should act with reasonable skill and care in treating the boy:—Held, that there was no evidence upon which the jury could find that such an undertaking existed, and that the obligation undertaken by a local authority carrying on a hospital is only that they will use reasonable skill and care in selecting the staff (Evans v. Corporation of Liverpool, [1906] 1 K. B. 160; 69 J. P. 263). In an earlier county court action damages had been recovered in a similar case (Keegan v. Birmingham Corporation (1896), Times, March 14th). So, too, the Governors of St. Bartholomew's Hospital were held not to be responsible to a non-paying patient for injuries received by him through the "displacement of a hot-water can" during an operation. Hospital surgeons and the nurses, at any rate when acting under the orders of such surgeons in the operating room, are not servants of the governors so as to render the latter liable in case of any negligence. The duty of the governors is to exercise reasonable care in selecting a competent professional staff and in furnishing such staff with proper apparatus and appliances (Hillyer v. St. Bartholomew's Hospital Governors (or London Corporation), [1909] 2 K. B 820; 73 J. P. 501; followed in Foote v. Shaw Stewart, [1912] S. C. 69. See also Davis v. London C. C. (1914), 30 T. L. R. 275).

A porter at an infectious diseases hospital contracted scarlet fever, and claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. There was no satisfactory evidence as to the time, place, and circumstances at or under which he caught the disease, but he probably did so in the course of his duties:—Held, that the contracting of the disease could not under the circumstances be called an "accident" (Martin v. Manchester Corporation, [1912] W. N. 105; 76 J. P. 250).

M. of H. practice when loan desired.

(c) If a local authority desire to obtain a loan to defray the cost of providing a hospital, the sanction of the M. of H. must be obtained (ss. 233, 234). Any provisional agreement entered into by the authority for the purchase of land as a site for the hospital should therefore be made conditional upon such sanction being given. Any application to the Ministry for sanction to a loan should be accompanied by (1) a copy of the authority's resolution; (2) detailed estimates; (3) a map showing the boundaries of the sanitary district, the parish and sanitary district in which the site is comprised, the position of the site and the means of access to it from various points; (4) a further map on a large scale (say that of twenty-five inches to the mile), showing the area and shape of the proposed site and its relation to houses and lands in its immediate vicinity; (5) plans of the proposed hospital buildings in cases where the application includes the cost of such buildings; (6) a statement showing the number of persons residing within a quarter of a mile and half a mile, respectively, from the site; (7) information as to the available water supply and the proposed means for disposing of the sewage of the hospital; and (8) particulars (in forms which are obtainable) respecting the assessable value and the existing debt for sanitary purposes of the district.

The plans of the hospital buildings should be submitted to the Ministry at an early stage of their preparation. If they are not found to be satisfactory the Department is usually willing to arrange for a conference on the subject at their office between representatives of the local authority (accompanied by their architect and medical officer of health) and representatives of the Ministry's medical and architectural departments. Before sanctioning a loan the Ministry usually cause a public local inquiry into the matter to be held in the district by one of their inspectors, at which any person interested may attend and give evidence. Due public notice of any such inquiry is given in the locality concerned.

M. of H. memoranda as to site, construction, etc.

The Ministry issue memoranda for the guidance of local authorities in the selection of a suitable site for a hospital for infectious diseases and the erection of the buildings, and it may be useful to mention the points which the Ministry regard as absolutely indispensable.

The site, or so much of it as is to form the grounds of the hospital, should be enclosed by a wall or close fence at least six feet six inches in height, and every building which is to contain infected persons or things should be at least forty feet distant from the boundary.

The buildings should be preferably of brick or stone, as it is not the practice of the Ministry in ordinary cases to sanction loans for iron hospitals or hospital buildings of a temporary character. Apart from other considerations, buildings constructed of wood or corrugated iron are, as the Ministry are advised, ill suited for permanent use as hospitals, for the reason that it is difficult to maintain them at a proper temperature during extremes of hot and cold weather.

In the ward blocks each bed must have at least 12 linear feet of wall space, 144 square feet of floor space, and 2,000 cubic feet of air space.

In the case of smallpox hospitals the site must not have within a quarter of a mile of it either a hospital, whether for infectious diseases or not, or a workhouse, asylum, or any similar establishment, or a population of as many as 200 persons. It must not have within half a mile of it a population of as many as 600 persons, whether in one or more institutions, or in dwelling-houses; and even where the above conditions are fulfilled, a hospital must not be used at one and the same time for the reception of cases of smallpox and of any other class of disease.

Reception of accident cases.

The L. G. B. were advised that district councils are legally empowered to provide for the use of the inhabitants of their district a hospital for the treatment of cases of accident causing sickness, and they considered that the words "accident causing sickness" might be taken to include accidental injury sufficiently serious to make detention of the patient in a hospital desirable. The Board, when expressing this opinion, referred to the judgment of CHITTY, J., in Withington L. B. v. Corporation of Manchester, ante, p. 238, where his lordship observed that the provisions of s. 131 are not severable, and that the hospital to be provided is for the sick, without any distinction as to the nature of the sickness, whether it be infectious or not.

Lying-in hospitals.

The M. of H. do not consider that pregnant women incapacitated by reason of their pregnancy are "sick inhabitants" within the meaning of the section so as to enable local authorities to provide lying-in hospitals.

Charge for admission to infectious diseases hospital.

Upon the question of making a charge for admission to an infectious diseases hospital, the L. G. B. expressed themselves as follows: While the means of isolation afforded by the hospital is of considerable benefit to the individuals, such means should be regarded as directed to the attainment of the larger benefit of the protection of the general public health, and therefore it is, in the Board's opinion, undesirable that admission should be subject to any charges and conditions which, by operating restrictively, may tend to prevent the use of the hospital by the poorer portion of the community, that is to say, by those who have the least facilities for isolation and treatment at their own homes.

Rules as to discipline, etc.

The M. of H. consider that rules may with advantage be drawn up by a district council for the purpose of maintaining proper discipline in a hospital provided by them, of preventing any extension of disease by hospital agencies, and for giving notice to the relatives of patients of the restrictions placed on visitors. They also state that in framing such rules it is desirable that the council should be guided by the medical practitioner administering the affairs of the hospital, but that the Ministry would generally be willing to assist in the matter if a draft of the rules were submitted to them.

Hospitals causing, or likely to cause, a nuisance.

It has already been observed that an authority are merely enabled, and not required, to provide hospitals under this section. The statute will not, therefore, be any defence to an action against them, nor will it prevent an injunction from issuing, if they erect a hospital for infectious diseases so as to be a nuisance to any person. This was so held with reference to similar permissive provisions in the Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867, in Managers of the Metropolitan Asylums District v. Hill (1881), 6 App. Cas. 193; 45 J. P. 664. The principle of that case was approved in Canadian Pacific Rail. Co. v. Parke, [1899] A. C. 535; see also Hanley v. Edinburgh, [1913] A. C. 488. Where an authority treated smallpox cases in a stable close to the plaintiff's house, and his daughter caught the disease, there was a verdict and judgment for him (Chapman v. Gillingham U. D. C., Times, March 28th, 1903). Upon an outbreak of diphtheria an authority erected an isolation hospital near the plaintiff's house. Shortly afterwards one of his children developed diphtheria. Four days previously she had crawled under the wire fence of the hospital and approached close to it. RIDLEY, J., held that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury, as the child might have caught the disease in many different ways (Sherwell v. Alton U. D. C. (1909), 25 T. L. R. 417).

With regard to hospitals for smallpox or fever patients, it has been questioned how far they could be erected in a town. In Baines v. Baker (1752), 3 Atk. 750, the LORD CHANCELLOR refused an injunction to stay the erection of a smallpox hospital in Coldbath Fields, in London, and referred to a case of R. v. Frewen, where on indictment for a nuisance in erecting such a hospital in Sussex, the defendant was acquitted; and see R. v. Sutton (1767), 4 Burr. 2116. It is attributed to Lord HARDWICKE that he said in Baines v. Baker, supra (3 Atk., at p. 751), "the fears of mankind, though they may be reasonable ones, will not create a nuisance," but Lord HALSBURY, in Cowper Essex v. Acton L. B. (1889), 14 App. Cas. 153, at p. 161, said: ". . . It is quite clear that that is not now the law, if the fears are assumed to be reasonable." See also Att.-Gen. v. Nottingham Corporation, infra. In Managers of the Kensington Sick Asylum District v. Gunter (not reported), WICKENS, V.-C., intimated an opinion in conformity with the previous decision. The rule seems to be that laid down by Lord BLACKBURN in Metropolitan Asylums District v. Hill, supra, "To gather together in one spot patients suffering from infectious disease is lawful, but it must be under such guards as not to endanger the public health by communicating this infectious disease; and, as it seems to me, so as not to produce injury to the rights of the owners of adjoining property by producing a nuisance to it." In Mutter v. Fyfe (1848), 11 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (2nd ser.), 303, the Court of Session held that a cholera hospital was not necessarily a nuisance, and refused to restrain its erection.

In Chambers v. Managers of the Metropolitan Asylums District (1881), 25 Sol. J. 834, an interlocutory injunction was granted restraining the defendants until trial from sending any more smallpox patients into their Fulham hospital. The court appear to have acted upon evidence to the effect that the hospital was a centre of contagion. In Fleet v. Managers of the Metropolitan Asylums District (1884), 1 T. L. R. 80, the defendants had established within 685 yards of the plaintiff's house a smallpox camp. He alleged that the health of the neighbourhood had been endangered by the camp, and that the camp was a nuisance, and claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from maintaining it. PEARSON, J., held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that there was any danger to him or those residing upon his property, and dismissed the action. In his judgment in the Court of Appeal which affirmed the decision ((1886), 2 T. L. R. 361), COTTON, L.J., pointed out that it was for the plaintiffs to prove an appreciable injury to their property. And see Saunders v. New Windsor (Mayor, etc. of), Law Times, September 18th, 1886, and Matthews v. Sheffield (Mayor, etc. of), Law Times, October 7th, 1887. In a subsequent case, where such appreciable injury was proved, an interim injunction was granted, restraining an authority from continuing a smallpox hospital (Bendelow v. Wortley Union (Guardians of) (1887), 57 L. J. Ch. 762; 57 L. T. 849). See also Garton v. Guildford, Godalming and Woking Joint Hospital Board, Times, March 23rd, 1895.

An authority proposed to establish a smallpox hospital on land of their own in an adjoining district within 240 yards of two public roads, within 90 yards of a much used part of a cemetery, and within 256 yards of the nearest residence. Plaintiff contended that it would amount to a public nuisance as being dangerous to the health of the neighbourhood, and applied for an injunction:—Held, that in the present state of science the plaintiff had failed to show that there was a probability that the apprehended danger would in fact ensue (Att.-Gen. v. Manchester (Mayor, etc. of), [1893] 2 Ch. 87; 57 J. P. 343). And see per SCRUTTON, L.J., in Att.-Gen. v. Cory (1919), 88 L. J. Ch. 414. Injunctions were refused for the same reason in Att.-Gen. v. Guildford, etc. Joint Hospital Board (1895), 12 T. L. R. 54; Harrop v. Ossett (Mayor, etc. of), [1898] 1 Ch. 525; 62 J. P. 297. See also Att.-Gen. v. Rathmines and Pembroke Joint Hospital Board, [1904] 1 I. R. 161.

Quia timet actions.

Where no actual case of injury has arisen, and the action is purely quia timet, the plaintiffs must, in order to succeed, show a strong probability that the apprehended mischief will in fact arise (Att.-Gen. v. Nottingham Corporation, [1904] 1 Ch. 673; 68 J. P. 125). In this case FARWELL, J., considered previous decisions, and quoted, with approval, the following words of FITZGIBBON, L.J., in Att.-Gen. v. Rathmines and Pembroke Joint Hospital Board, supra: "To sustain the injunction the law requires proof by the plaintiffs of a well-founded apprehension of injury—proof of actual and real danger—a strong probability, almost amounting to moral certainty, that if the hospital be established it will be an actionable nuisance. A sentiment of danger and dislike, however natural and justified, certainty that the hospital will be disagreeable or inconvenient, proof that it will abridge a man's pleasure or make him anxious, the inability of the court to say that no danger will arise, none of these accompanied by depreciation of property will discharge the burden of proof which rests on the plaintiffs, or justify a merely precautionary injunction restraining an owner's use of his own land upon the ground of apprehended injury to his neighbours." In such a case, too, the court ought to assume that the hospital will be properly managed, and that all precautions that scientific skill and knowledge usually require will be taken (per FARWELL, J., in the above case). According to BRAMWELL and COTTON, L.JJ., in Hill v. Metropolitan Asylum District (No. 1) (1879), 42 L. T. 212, evidence-in-chief is admissible in such an action to show what has occurred in the neighbourhood of other smallpox hospitals carried on under similar conditions. In the House of Lords, Lord SELBORNE appeared to agree with the Lords Justices, but Lord O'HAGAN dissented. (See 47 L. T. 29.) Sed quære, whether the admission of such evidence is not wrong in principle as raising a number of side issues on which it is impossible for the court to adjudicate without injury to absent parties (per FARWELL, J., in the Nottingham Case, supra).

Acquisition of site for hospital.

Sections 175, 176, post, p. 412, enable an authority to procure the land required for the site, and ss. 207 et seq., provide for the cost. As to compensation for, and disregard of, restrictive covenants on a compulsory purchase, see Kirby v. Harrogate School Board, [1896] 1 Ch. 437; 60 J. P. 182, and notes on p. 420, post.

The lessor of a dairy farm reserved by the lease the right to sell any part of the farm for "building sites." A local authority purchased a portion as a site for a smallpox hospital, and after they commenced building operations the lessee sued them for damages. The court held that the provision of a site for such a hospital was an exceptional purpose, quite unconnected with the well-understood expression, "land for building sites," and that the defendants had acquired no title to the land (English v. Tynemouth Corporation (1903), 67 J. P. 239; 1 L. G. R. 177).

For forms of contract in connection with the supply of a temporary hospital, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at pp. 423, 426.

Contracts for the use of premises.

(d) For a form of agreement, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 419. Before contracting for the use of any building not already in use as a hospital, it will be well to inquire whether there is any covenant which prevents the use of the premises as a hospital. Such a covenant is of the essence of the contract as between lessor and lessee, and relief cannot be granted against a breach of it (Macher v. Foundling Hospital (1813), 1 V. & B. 188). The use of premises as a hospital has been held to be a "business" where the patients made small payments according to their means (Bramwell v. Lucy (1879), 10 Ch. D. 691; 43 J. P. 446; Portman v. Home Hospital Association (1879), 27 Ch. D. 81 n). The establishment of a hospital for outdoor patients, suffering from diseases of the throat, nose, ear, skin, and eye, fistula, and other diseases, was held to be a breach of a covenant in a lease against carrying on certain specified trades, or doing any act "which shall or may be or grow to the annoyance, nuisance, grievance, or damage of the lessor, his heirs, or assigns, or the inhabitants of the neighbouring or adjoining houses," and was restrained by injunction. In order to enforce such a covenant it is not necessary to show that actual damage or pecuniary loss has been sustained. It is sufficient without proving actual risk of infection that sensible people feel a reasonable apprehension of risk and interference with the pleasurable enjoyment of their houses for ordinary purposes, as distinguished from a mere fanciful feeling of distaste entertained by sensitive persons. Per LINDLEY, L.J.: Without deciding that the existence of such a hospital is per se an annoyance, the apprehension of risk of infection entertained by reasonable men amounts to a breach of the extra protection intended to be given to the covenantee by the introduction into the covenant of the words "annoyance and grievance," in addition to "nuisance or damage" (Harrison v. Good (1871), L. R. 11 Eq. 338, in limiting the term "nuisance" in a restrictive covenant to that which is a legal nuisance questioned): —Held, also, that the covenant was not confined to the lessor and his own sub-tenants, but would be broken by annoyance to the inhabitants of neighbouring or adjoining houses (Tod-Heatley v. Benham (1888), 40 Ch. D. 80). In Pembroke (Earl of) v. Warren, [1895] 1 I. R. 76, it was held (FITZGIBBON, L.J., diss.) that the establishment of a private hospital for medical and surgical, but not for infectious cases, in a house in Fitzwilliam Square, Dublin, was a breach of covenant against using the house for certain specified businesses, or any other offensive or noisy trade, business, or profession whatsoever. Cf. Wauton v. Coppard, [1899] 1 Ch. 92, and Frost v. Welsh (1919), 35 T. L. R. 138.

Agreement with managers of a hospital.

(e) For a form of agreement, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 429. The L. G. B. have expressed the opinion that a district council may agree to pay to a general hospital an annual sum in consideration of the treatment of persons sent there by the council in addition to, or in lieu of, payment for each case. See also note (b), ante, p. 239. As to the power of guardians to subscribe towards the maintenance and support of a hospital or infirmary, see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 105, s. 4; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 63, s. 16; 42 & 43 Vict. c. 54, s. 10. As to the power of the Metropolitan Asylums Board to contract with local authorities in the metropolis, see 54 & 55 Vict. c. 76, ss. 76, 80.

Combination of authorities.

(f) Sufficient details are not provided here to enable this combination generally to be carried into practical operation, but if an agreement be properly drawn, it may be possible to effect a combination which will act satisfactorily. The powers of s. 57 of the L. G. A., 1894, may be found useful for this purpose. The M. of H. generally advise, however, that when a hospital is to be provided for two or more districts in combination it should be placed under a joint hospital board (see ss. 279 et seq.). Such a board consists of members elected by the authorities concerned, together with such ex officio members as the Ministry may by the provisional order determine. Joint boards exercise their powers independently, and, being corporate bodies, are able to buy and sell lands, borrow money, etc.

A board of guardians is not a local authority within the meaning of ss. 4 and 131 of the Act, and cannot combine with a district council in the provision of a joint hospital. If the latter provide a hospital the guardians can agree with them for the reception of patients. See note (b), ante, p. 239. See a form of agreement in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at p. 433.

Under a deed of 1885, the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs and of the defendants, and the corporation of B., were entitled to the joint use of a hospital; and the expenses of maintenance were apportioned between and paid by the several authorities annually. In 1898 by another deed between the same authorities or their successors, the provisions of the deed of 1885 as to management were varied, and it was provided that that agreement might be determined by a six months' notice in writing. Under a third deed in 1905 between the plaintiffs and the defendants and the corporation, and stated to be supplemental to the two previous deeds, the corporation withdrew and were released from all liability under the deeds of 1885 and 1898, and the provisions for management were again varied. In 1906 the defendants gave notice under the deed of 1898 to determine the three deeds and ceased to use the hospital and to contribute to its maintenance:—Held, that the provision as to giving notice applied only to the deed of 1898, that the notice given was invalid, and that the deeds of 1885 and 1905 were still subsisting. Some of the constituent authorities had been altered or dissolved by the L. G. A., 1894, and the Stoke-upon-Trent Order, 1908. It was further held that neither under the latter Order, nor under the L. G. A., 1888, s. 62, were the defendants entitled to have the questions between them and the plaintiffs referred to arbitration (Wolstanton United U. D. C. v. Tunstall U. D. C., [1910] 2 Ch. 347; 74 J. P. 353). On appeal the judgment was varied by consent, and the disputes referred to an arbitrator ([1911] 1 Ch. 229; 75 J. P. 203).

See s. 2 of the Isolation Hospitals Act, 1901, for the power of a county council to contribute to the expenses of a hospital under this Act.

Recovery of costs of patient's maintenance in hospital.

132. Any expenses incurred by a local authority in maintaining in a hospital, or in a temporary place for the reception of the sick (whether or not belonging to such authority), a patient who is not a pauper, shall be deemed to be a debt due from such patient to the local authority, and may be recovered from him at any time within six months after his discharge from such hospital or place of reception, or from his estate in the event of his dying in such hospital or place.

As regards ships, see the Public Health (Ships) Act, 1885, post. See also the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, s. 12, post, as to the detention in a hospital of a person suffering from infectious disease, and ss. 9, 10 of the same Act as to the burial of persons dying in a hospital of infectious disease.

Note to Section 132.

The wording of this section is peculiar, for although the expenses become a debt due to the authority, the latter "may" (not must) take steps to recover the same. The L. G. B. once stated that, in their opinion, the provision contained in the section authorising the recovery from a patient of the expenses of maintenance in hospital is permissive, not compulsory, and that the district council concerned are not required to take steps for recovering such expenses unless they see fit to do so. And in districts to which it has been applied, s. 60 of the P. H. A., 1907, post, makes it clear that the authority can exercise a discretion in the matter. If it be decided to take proceedings, the patient may be sued in any court for the recovery of debts, with this qualification, that whereas the usual statute of limitation for civil debts is six years, here it is six months.

Authority may forego payment.

The section does not give a remedy against a person other than the patient, such as a parent or employer. If such a person can be made liable at all, it must be by virtue of a contract express or implied. This note was cited with approval by CHANNELL, J., in a case where an authority sought to recover maintenance from a father whose child had been supported in an isolation hospital. A Divisional Court held that s. 132 imposed no liability on the father, and that a person other than the patient can only be made liable by virtue of a contract express or implied (Hull Corporation v. Maclaren, Local Government Chronicle, 1898, 585). A hospital for children maintained a convalescent home within the district of a local authority. The matron of the authority's isolation hospital received a telephonic message from the doctor in attendance at the home, requesting the admission of certain children who had developed scarlet fever. In an action against the hospital for the maintenance of the children it was held that there was no liability under this section, but a new trial was ordered on the question of contract (Farquhar v. Isle of Thanet Hospital Board (1904), 68 J. P. 319; 2 L. G. R. 1310). In Dunstable Corporation v. Costin (1908), 30 M. C. C. 517, a county court judge found an implied contract by a householder to pay for his children and a servant removed to a fever hospital.

Person liable.

Guardians are not empowered to make a payment in respect of the treatment and maintenance of persons who were not sent to the hospital by their order or that of their officers, except upon application for relief, and then only from the date upon which relief is granted.

Certain pauper children chargeable to the C. Union were, under the provisions of the Poor Law (Certified Schools) Act, 1862, sent to a school in T., which was one of the constituent districts of the B. and D. Joint Hospital Board, constituted by Provisional Order under s. 279, post. An outbreak of fever having occurred at the school, some of the children were taken to the hospital of such joint hospital board at the instance of the medical adviser to the school, who was also the medical officer of health for the T. district. The authority of the guardians of the C. Union, which was outside the joint hospital area, was not obtained for the removal of the children. In an action by the joint hospital board against the C. guardians to recover the expenses of maintaining the children:—Held, (1) that the plaintiffs could not recover under any statutory provisions; (2) that there was, in fact, no promise by the superintendent of the school to repay the expenses of maintaining the children, and, moreover, that the superintendent had no authority to pledge the credit of the defendants to any expense outside the school; and (3) that there was no such urgency as to create an implied request by the defendants to the plaintiffs to maintain the children in the hospital. Semble, even if the case had been one of urgency the plaintiffs would not have been entitled to recover (Bury and District Joint Hospital Board v. Chorlton Union (1905), 70 J. P. 31; 4 L. G. R. 489).

It has been held that an authority are bound to receive into their hospital all sick inhabitants of their district, whether paupers or not; though if the guardians send their paupers to such hospital, it seems that they must be prepared to pay for their maintenance (R. v. Rawtenstall (Mayor, etc. of) (1894), 10 T. L. R. 643; Banbury (Mayor, etc. of) v. Banbury Union (1900), 22 M. C. C. 484). Cf. however, Farquhar v. Isle of Thanet Hospital Board, supra, where Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., and KENNEDY, J., expressed the opinion that there was no legal obligation to accept patients.

Section 133.

Power to provide temporary supply of medicine.

133. Any local authority may with the sanction of the Local Government Board, themselves provide or contract with any person to provide a temporary supply of medicine and medical assistance for th poorer inhabitants of their district.

As regards ships, see the 48 & 49 Vict. c. 35, post.

Medicine.

Under this section (re-enacted from 31 & 32 Vict. c. 115, s. 10) the L. G. B. authorised the supply of medicine, etc., by several general orders such as those relating to diphtheria, cerebro-spinal fever, etc. See the Orders inserted in the Appendix. The M. of H. also sanction annually a gratuitous supply of diarrhœa mixture to hop-pickers in certain rural districts. In giving sanction the Ministry do so subject to such limitations on the distribution and use of the medicine as may be held to be necessary by the medical man who is responsible for advising as to its ingredients.

It may be noted also that under Art. XIII. of the Public Health (Tuberculosis) Regulations (see App. II., post, Vol. II.) an authority may supply medical and other assistance, and facilities and articles reasonably required for detecting and combating tuberculosis, and may distribute leaflets containing information as to the disease. See also Public Health (Prevention and Treatment of Disease) Act, 1913, s. 3, post, as to the power of an authority and a county council to make arrangements for treating tuberculosis. As to the power of an authority to provide nurses, see the P. H. A., 1907, s. 67, post, and the Isolation Hospitals Act, 1893, s. 15, in App. I., post, Vol. II.

As to the power of guardians to enter into arrangements with hospital authorities, see s. 131, notes (b), p. 239, ante, and (e), ante, p. 244.

A form of agreement for use under s. 133, supra, will be found in the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., p. 431.

PREVENTION OF EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

Power of Local Government Board to make regulations for prevention of diseases.

134. Whenever any part of England appears to be threatened with or is affected by any formidable epidemic endemic or infectious disease (a), the Local Government Board (b) may make, and from time to time alter and revoke, regulations for all or any of the following purposes; (namely,)

(1) For the speedy interment of the dead; and

(2) For house to house visitation; and

(3) For the provision of medical aid and accommodation, for the promotion of cleansing ventilation and disinfection, and for guarding against the spread of disease; and may by order declare all or any of the regulations so made to be in force within the whole or any part or parts of the district of any local authority, and to apply to any vessels, whether on inland waters or on arms or parts of the sea within the jurisdiction of the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom or the commissioners for executing the office of the Lord High Admiral for the time being, for the period in such order mentioned; and may by any subsequent order abridge or extend such period.

The power to make regulations under s. 130, ante, p. 237, and this section is extended by the P. H. A., 1904, the Public Health (Regulations as to Food) Act, 1907, and the P. H. A., 1896. See the relevant provisions of these Acts set out in notes (a) and (e) to s. 130, pp. 237, 238, ante. See also note (b) thereto as to regulations made under these sections.

The metropolis is provided for by the P. H. (London) A., 1891, ss. 82, 87, as amended by the P. H. Acts, 1896 and 1904, and the Public Health (Regulations as to Food) Act, 1907.

Note to Section 134.

(a) Epidemic diseases are "those which prevail among a large portion of the people of a country, rage for a certain time, and then gradually diminish and disappear, to return again at periods more or less remote. The cholera and influenza lately appeared as epidemic diseases in this country, and the continued fevers called synochus and typhus, and what are termed the eruptive fevers, as scarlet fever, the smallpox, the measles, frequently prevail as epidemics in different parts of the country. It is essential to the medical notion of an epidemic disease, that it should be dependent on some common and widely extended cause, of a temporary in contradistinction to a persistent nature."

"Epidemic" diseases.

Endemic diseases are "those peculiar forms of disease which arise spontaneously as it is termed, in a country, or in particular localities, and which are ordinarily produced by the peculiar climate, soil, air, water, etc. Thus ague is the endemic disease of marshy countries or localities, the swelled throat or bronchocele is endemic in the Alps, and the plica in Poland. The word bears pretty much the same signification, in relation to the diseases of a country, that the term indigenous does to its plants" (Penny Cyclopædia, in verbis). A disease may be endemic in one country (e.g., cholera in certain parts of India), but epidemic when it occurs elsewhere.

"Endemic" diseases.

These diseases, however, must be formidable, which implies so extensive an existence as to create a very general alarm.

(b) It rests with the M. of H. to determine how far the nature of the disease and the extent of its prevalence is such as to require those extraordinary measures to be taken. They have absolute control over the regulations to be prescribed; but, without prejudice to the generality of their powers under this section, the P. H. A., 1896, post, prescribes certain matters for which the regulations may provide in regard to vessels and persons on board, and also enacts penalties for enforcement of the regulations.

135. All regulations and orders so made by the Local Government Board shall be published in the London Gazette, and such publication shall be conclusive evidence thereof for all purposes.

Publication of regulations and orders.

Production of the Gazette is evidence of the making and issuing of the orders. But the copy produced must contain the imprint of the King's printer, and purport to be published by authority. A conviction was quashed where sessions received in evidence an entire page of the Gazette not containing these requisites (R. v. Lowe (1883), 52 L. J. M. C. 122; 47 J. P. 535).

136. The local authority of any district within which or part of which regulations so issued by the Local Government Board are declared to be in force, shall superintend and see to the execution thereof, and shall appoint and pay such medical or other officers or persons, and do and provide all such acts matters and things as may be necessary for mitigating any such disease (a), or for superintending or aiding in the execution of such regulations, or for executing the same, as the case may require. Moreover, the local authority may from time to time direct any prosecution or legal proceedings for or in respect of the wilful violation or neglect of any such regulation (b).

Local authority to see to the execution of regulations.

(a) The functions of the local authority are not confined to the enforcement of the regulations. They may use all other measures which may be recommended to them in the emergency, not at variance with the official regulations.

(b) As to penalties, see s. 140, post, p. 248, and note thereto. The cost of prosecutions will be a legal charge on the funds of the authority prosecuting, in so far as they are not recovered from the defendants.

137. The local authority and their officers shall have power of entry (a) on any premises (b) or vessel for the purpose of executing or

Power of entry.

Section 137. superintending the execution of any regulations so issued by the Local Government Board as aforesaid.

(a) No warrant or previous demand is required. The refusal to admit will be a wilful obstruction, as to which see s. 140, infra, and note thereto.

(b) See the definition of premises, in s. 4, ante, p. 7.

Poor law medical officer entitled to costs of attendance on board vessels.

138. Whenever, in compliance with any regulations so issued by the Local Government Board as aforesaid, any poor law medical officer performs any medical service on board any vessel he shall be entitled to charge extra for such service, at the general rate of his allowance for services for the union or place for which he is appointed; and such charges shall be payable by the captain of such vessel on behalf of the owners thereof, together with any reasonable expenses for the treatment of the sick (a).

Where such services are rendered by any medical practitioner (b) who is not a poor law medical officer, he shall be entitled to charges for any service rendered on board, with extra remuneration on account of distance, at the same rate as those which he is in the habit of receiving from private patients of the class of those attended and treated on ship-board, to be paid as aforesaid. In case of dispute in respect of such charges, such dispute may, where the charges do not exceed twenty pounds, be determined by a court of summary jurisdiction (c); and such court shall determine summarily the amount which is reasonable, according to the accustomed rate of charge within the place where the dispute arises for attendance on patients of the like class as those in respect of whom the charge is made.

(a) The meaning of this clause which was taken from 18 & 19 Vict. c. 116, s. 2, appears to be that the captain shall pay to the guardians the extra charges of the medical officer, and the expenses of the treatment.

(c) See the definition, ante, p. 36, and s. 251, post, as to the mode of recovery.

Local Government Board may combine local authorities.

139. The Local Government Board may, if they think fit, by order authorise or require any two or more local authorities to act together for the purposes of the provisions of this Act relating to prevention of epidemic diseases, and may prescribe the mode of such joint action and of defraying the costs thereof.

See the further provisions in Part VIII. for the formation of unions of districts for any of the purposes of this Act.

Penalty for violating or obstructing the execution of regulations.

140. Any person who—

(1) Wilfully violates any regulation so issued by the Local Government Board as aforesaid; or,

(2) Wilfully obstructs (a) any person acting under the authority or in the execution of any such regulation, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds.

This section, though not repealed, appears to be superseded by the P. H. A., 1896, s. 1 (3) (for which see note (g) to s. 130, p. 238, ante), which provides heavier penalties.

See, as to the recovery of penalties, s. 251, post.

(a) As to the meaning of the word "obstructs," see Swallow v. L. C. C., [1916] 1 K. B. 224; 80 J. P. 164.

Note to Section 140.

MORTUARIES, ETC.

141. Any local authority may, and if required by the Local Government Board shall, provide (a) and fit up a proper place for the reception of dead bodies before interment (in this Act called a mortuary (b)), and may make byelaws with respect to the management and charges for the use of the same (c); they may also provide for the decent and economical interment (d) at charges to be fixed by such byelaws of any dead body which may be received into a mortuary.

Power of local authority to provide mortuaries.

This section does not of course apply to the metropolis. The P. H. (London) A., 1891, ss. 88, 93, enables sanitary authorities in the metropolis to provide places for the reception of dead bodies.

(a) See s. 175, post, p. 412, as to the provisions for acquiring land for a site. Formerly it was optional with an urban authority whether they should provide a mortuary.

The L. G. B., in a memorandum as to the provision of mortuaries by local authorities, made the following observations amongst others:

Memoranda of L. G. B. as to site, construction, etc

In the choice of a site, care should be taken to ensure that the buildings to be erected thereon shall, as far as practicable, be isolated and unobtrusive. It may, indeed, be desirable to place the buildings on the site in such a position and manner as to admit of their being concealed from public view until the entrance-gate to the premises has been passed.

The building should be a substantial structure of brick, stone, or other hard and incombustible material.

Every chamber intended for the reception of corpses should be on the ground or basement floor, and in its construction care should be taken to ensure convenience, decency, cleanliness, and coolness.

The chamber should be lofty, and the area of its floor sufficient to allow freedom of movement between the shelves, slabs, or tables on which the dead are to be placed.

There should be a ceiling to the chamber, or, if it be open to the roof, there should be a double roof with a space of 8 inches at least between the outer and inner covering or with the addition of an intervening layer of felt or other non-conducting material.

Floors should be solid of hard, impervious, and non-absorbent material, with even and smooth surface.

Ceilings should be of good plaster or of other equally suitable material, and the internal surfaces of the walls of hard, impervious, and non-absorbent material, the whole capable of being cleansed and disinfected.

Shelves, slabs, or tables may be conveniently placed around the interior of the chamber. These should be of hard, impervious, and non-absorbent material of adequate strength, and capable of being readily cleansed and disinfected. The height of these should not exceed 3 feet above the floor.

The chamber should be lighted by vertical windows on the north side. Lantern lights, skylights, or roof lights should be avoided. If it is necessary to place windows on the east or west sides, external louvre blinds should be provided for the windows, but in no case should windows on the south side be used.

Adequate and suitable means of constant ventilation should be provided near the floor level and at the highest part of the chamber. All gratings and openings provided for this purpose should be protected by gauze or other suitably perforated material for the exclusion of flies, vermin, etc., and so arranged as to be removable for cleansing.

The entrance to the chamber should be direct, without the intervention of any passage.

The number of chambers should be at least two, so that one may be appropriated exclusively for the bodies of persons who have died of infectious disease, and the other for the bodies of persons whose death has been due to other causes. It may be expedient to place these chambers as far apart as may be practicable, so that persons visiting the chamber used for the reception of the bodies of those who have died of non-infectious disease may have no reason to fear infection.

Water should be laid on so as to be drawn from a tap within the chamber.

No drain should be within the chamber, but the floor should fall to a channel leading to a trapped gully on the outside of the building.

Mortuaries outside district.

The L. G. B. expressed the view that s. 141 would probably enable a local authority to provide and fit up outside their district a proper place for the reception of dead bodies before interment. They doubted, however, whether the paying for accommodation in the mortuary of an adjoining district could be held to come within the meaning of the section. And further, it appeared to them that the adoption of a site outside the district of the authority might in some cases be attended with difficulty, as for example, in the recovery of expenses under s. 142.

Hiring of mortuaries.

Whether the hiring of buildings, or parts of buildings, would come within the section would depend, in the opinion of the Board, on whether the same would be proper places for the reception of dead bodies before interment.

Joint mortuaries.

In case two or more district councils desire to combine for the provision and maintenance of a mortuary, the necessary powers are given by s. 285.

Private hospital and workhouse mortuaries.

In a case in which a district council proposed to make a contribution towards the cost of a mortuary about to be erected by the authorities of the local cottage hospital, the L. G. B. expressed the view that any such accommodation which might be needed for the purposes of the section should be provided by the district council themselves, and be under their exclusive control.

Workhouse mortuaries can only properly be used for the reception of the bodies of paupers.

Inquest rooms.

The Board and the M. of H. have stated that a district council have no power under the general law to provide accommodation for a coroner in holding an inquest, but where a coroner's district is situate wholly within a municipal borough, the provision of an inquest room may be held to be within the powers of the municipal corporation under s. 105 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882.

(b) The provisions of this section are extended to the provision of cemeteries by the Public Health (Interments) Act, 1879, post, and of crematoria by the Cremation Act, 1902, in App. I., post, Vol. II.

Provision of mortuaries under other powers.

Mortuaries may also be provided under the Burial Act, 1852, s. 42, as extended to parishes beyond the metropolis by the Burial Act, 1853. Section 42 is as follows: "It shall be lawful for any burial board, with the approval of the vestry, and subject to the provisions of this Act and the regulations to be made thereunder, and for the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of any parish . . . for which a burial board shall not have been appointed under this Act, by the direction of the vestry, and subject as aforesaid, to hire, take on lease, or otherwise to provide fit and proper places in which bodies may be received and taken care of previously to interment, and to make arrangements for the reception and care of the bodies to be deposited therein; and for providing such places such burial boards may exercise the powers vested in them under this Act for providing burial grounds; and churchwardens and overseers may exercise all such powers as, under the Poor Relief Act, 1819, or otherwise, the churchwardens and overseers of any parish not having a workhouse might exercise for providing a workhouse for such parish." See s. 7 of the L. G. A., 1894, as to the adoption of the Burial Acts in a rural parish (Brooke-Little's Law of Burials, 3rd ed., p. 102). Without such adoption, however (and it is doubtful whether the Acts can legally be adopted merely for the purpose of enabling a parish council to provide a mortuary), it is competent to the overseers to provide one under the provisions of the Act of 1852 referred to. The necessary directions should be given by the parish council. It will be observed that the overseers have no power to borrow money for the purpose.

For a case in which a hospital porter unsuccessfully claimed compensation in respect of an attack of scarlet fever alleged to have been contracted in cleaning the mortuary, see Martin v. Manchester Corporation, on p. 240, ante.

Model byelaws and L. G. B. memorandum on the subject.

(c) See as to the making, etc. of byelaws, ss. 182—188, post. The L. G. B. issued model byelaws under the sections. (See Mackenzie and Handford's Model Byelaws, Vol. I., p. 507.) In the memorandum prefixed thereto the Board said: It is chiefly in relation to those cases where the mortuary is used otherwise than in pursuance of an order of a justice under s. 142 of the Act of 1875, or s. 10 of the Act of 1890, that it is important to consider to what extent sanitary authorities should avail themselves of their power of making byelaws, and also by what other means they may provide for the efficient management of the mortuary, and for the removal and reception of the dead with least danger to the living. Note to Section 141.

It is quite possible that at some future time, when the voluntary use of mortuaries may have become more general than at present, sanitary authorities may find it expedient to exercise more fully their power of making byelaws under s. 141. Under existing circumstances, however, it appears to the Board that sanitary authorities may be advised to rely upon good administrative arrangements rather than upon byelaws for the proper management of their mortuaries. For certain purposes byelaws will doubtless be necessary in most districts for which mortuaries have been provided. To such purposes the clauses comprised in the model series of byelaws have reference.

(d) Quære, by whom ? Apparently by the local authority.

142. Where the body of one who has died of any infectious disease is retained in a room in which persons live or sleep, or any dead body which is in such a state as to endanger the health of the inmates of the same house or room is retained in such house or room, any justice may, on a certificate signed by a legally qualified medical practitioner (a), order the body to be removed, at the cost of the local authority, to any mortuary provided by such authority, and direct the same to be buried within a time to be limited in such order; and unless the friends or relations of the deceased undertake to bury the body within the time so limited, and do bury the same, it shall be the duty of the relieving officer (b) to bury such body at the expense of the poor rate, but any expense so incurred may be recovered by the relieving officer in a summary manner (c) from any person legally liable to pay the expense of such burial. Justice may in certain cases order removal of dead body to mortuary.

Any person obstructing (d) the execution of an order made by a justice under this section shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds (e).

(a) I.e., registered under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 34, and 49 & 50 Vict. c. 48. For forms of certificate and order, see the Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. X., at pp. 406, 407. The provisions of this section are available only where there is a mortuary.

Where the Infectious Disease (Prevention) Act, 1890, is in force by adoption, s. 8 provides that no person without the sanction in writing of the medical officer of health or of a registered medical practitioner, shall retain unburied elsewhere than in a public mortuary or in a room not used at the time as a dwelling-place, sleeping-place, or workroom, for more than forty-eight hours, the body of any person who has died of any infectious disease. Section 9 enables means to be taken to prevent the removal, except to a mortuary or for burial, of the body of a person who has died of infectious disease in a hospital. Section 10 enables a justice to order the burial of the body of a person who has died of an infectious disease, if such body has remained unburied elsewhere than in a mortuary or in a room not used at the time as a dwelling-place, etc., or for any body whose retention in a house may endanger health. See these sections in extenso, post. Further statutory provisions on the subject.

(b) This must be the relieving officer of the union or parish in which the mortuary is situated, and care must be taken to have the justice's order served upon him, or otherwise secure that he has notice of the case. He cannot recover the amount himself from the poor rate, but can enter it in his accounts and receive the amount from the guardians. It is to be observed that this provision is confined to cases where the removal has been ordered by a justice. Duty of relieving officer.

Note to Section 142.

(c) See s. 251, post. If the guardians have paid the relieving officer, he will prosecute the proceedings for their reimbursement.

(d) As to the meaning of this word, see Swallow v. L. C. C., [1916] 1 K. B. 224; 80 J. P. 164.

(e) As to the recovery of this penalty, see s. 251, post.

Power of local authority to provide places for post-mortem examinations.

143. Any local authority may provide (a) and maintain a proper place (otherwise than at a workhouse or at a mortuary) (b) for the reception of dead bodies during the time required to conduct any post-mortem examination ordered by a coroner (c) or other constituted authority, and may make regulations (d) with respect to the management of such place; and where any such place has been provided, a coroner or other constituted authority may order the removal of the body to and from such place for carrying out such post-mortem examination, such costs of removal to be paid in the same manner and out of the same fund as the costs and fees for post-mortem examinations when ordered by the coroner (e).

Optional.

(a) It will be observed that the M. of H. have no power (as in the case of the non-provision of a mortuary) to compel an authority to provide a place for post-mortem examinations.

Site and arrangement.

A post-mortem room provided under this Act must not be at a mortuary, and the L. G. B. (in cases coming before them) even objected in some cases to the two buildings being under the same roof. They stated that any post-mortem room to be erected in connection with a mortuary should be separated by an intervening space as great as the site will allow. Separate approaches should if possible be provided. In designing the building the window should not be arranged so as to look out directly upon a street, and in addition to other means of lighting provision should be made for a window in such a position as to afford a good light for the examination of organs removed from a body under dissection.

Joint rooms.

Two or more local authorities may combine under s. 285 for the provision of accommodation for post-mortem examinations.

Charges.

The L. G. B. stated that no express authority was derived from the section to make a charge for the use of a post-mortem room.

In a case in which a parish council proposed to make a payment to an innkeeper for the use of a room and utensils for a post-mortem examination on a body exhumed by order of the coroner, the L. G. B. held that there was no legal authority for such a payment either by the parish council or overseers.

(b) This exception requires special attention. It is desired that places should be provided for the removal of dead bodies from the rooms of poor people where they die, and it would create on the part of the relatives a repugnance to such removal in many cases if a suspicion arose that such bodies might be subject to anatomical examination. See also note (a). 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 75, provides for dissections, and should be carefully attended to. The corresponding section applicable to the metropolis is 54 & 55 Vict. c. 76, s. 90.

(c) See the Coroners Act, 1887, ss. 21—24.

(d) Unlike byelaws, these require no confirmation. See s. 188, post, which, however, provides for the publication of these regulations.

Substituted provisions as to coroner's orders, fees, etc.

(e) The italicised words are repealed by the Coroners Act, 1887. Section 24 of that Act provides that when a place has been provided by a sanitary authority or nuisance authority for the reception of dead bodies during the time required to conduct a post-mortem examination, the coroner may order the removal of a dead body to and from such place for carrying out such examination, and the cost of such removal shall be deemed to be part of the expenses incurred in and about the holding of an inquest. Section 22 provides that no order of payment shall be given, or fee or remuneration paid to any medical practitioner, for the performance of any post-mortem examination which may be instituted without the previous direction of the coroner. Section 25 provides that the local authority for a county or borough having a coroner shall make or cause to be made a schedule of the several fees, allowances, and disbursements which, in the holding of any inquest, may be lawfully paid and made by the coroner holding such inquest (other than the fees paid to medical witnesses under that Act). By s. 26 the coroner is to pay the remuneration or fee to each medical witness (including the fees for post-mortem examination) immediately after the inquest: (As to fees to the honorary medical officer of a cottage hospital in which the deceased, being an inhabitant of the district, was a patient, see Horner v. Lewis (1898), 67 L. J. Q. B. 524; 62 J. P. 345). By s. 27 coroners are to lay their accounts before the local authority of the county or borough; and such authority may, if they think fit, examine the coroner on oath as to such account, and, on being satisfied of its correctness, shall order the treasurer of the county or borough to pay the sum due to him on such account.

There is some difficulty in reconciling the wording of s. 24 of the Act of 1887 with that of s. 143, supra, which seems to imply that as a general rule, mortuaries provided under this Act are not to be considered as proper places for the conduct of post-mortem examinations ordered by a coroner. The L. G. B. expressed the following views upon the subject: That a coroner cannot order a dead body to be conveyed to a mortuary provided by a local authority and there subjected to a post-mortem examination, and that in fact he can only order its removal to a place provided by the authority for the reception of a dead body during autopsy. Where, however, a body is lying in a mortuary, whether provided under s. 143 of the P. H. A., 1875, or s. 42 of the Burial Act, 1852, the coroner may order an autopsy to be held there.

PART IV.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT PROVISIONS.

HIGHWAYS AND STREETS.

As to Highways (a).

Powers of surveyors of highways and vestries under Highway Act, 1835, vested in urban authority.

144. Every urban authority shall within their district exclusively of any other person (b) execute the office of and be surveyor of highways, and have exercise and be subject to all the powers authorities duties and liabilities of surveyors of highways (c) under the law for the time being in force, save so far as such powers authorities or duties are or may be inconsistent with the provisions of this Act; every urban authority shall also have exercise and be subject to all the powers authorities duties and liabilities which by the Highway Act, 1835, or any Act amending the same (d), are vested in and given to the inhabitants in vestry assembled of any parish within their district (e).

All ministerial acts required by any Act of Parliament to be done by or to the surveyor of highways may be done by or to the surveyor of the urban authority, or by or to such other person as they may appoint (f).

"Main roads."

Later statutory provisions.

Additional powers and duties are conferred upon district councils by the L. G. A., 1894, s. 26, post, in relation to the protection of rights of way and the prevention of obstructions and encroachments.

In rural districts parish councils are given certain powers (under the L. G. A.,

Note to Section 144.

1894, ss. 8, 13), to acquire rights of way, and to undertake the repair of footpaths not beside roads. Urban district councils can obtain these powers by order of the M. of H. under s. 33 of that Act, in so far as such powers exceed those already possessed by them, e.g., in respect to acquiring rights of way outside the parish.

(b) This section determined the authority of a parish vestry, a highway board, or a surveyor of highways within the district of the urban authority.

Difficult questions formerly arose with reference to parts of parishes excluded from urban districts newly formed (see notes to s. 216, post). These difficulties were removed by the provisions of ss. 25 and 54 of the L. G. A., 1894, post.

Sections 144—148 now apply to rural districts also.

It will be observed that this section applied only to urban authorities, though a rural authority might have obtained the powers of an urban authority under the section by an order under s. 276, post. Such an order, however, is now unnecessary, for under the L. G. A., 1894, s. 25, post, rural district councils have not only succeeded to all the powers, duties, and liabilities of the rural sanitary authorities and highway authorities who previously acted in their districts, but were invested with all the powers, etc. of urban authorities under ss. 144—148, inclusive, of this Act. Under a proviso to s. 25 of the Act of 1894, the transfer of powers, etc. of highway authorities to rural district councils was in many cases postponed by order of the county council, but the transfer has long been complete. It will be observed that the powers under the Highway Acts which were transferred were those of the pre-existing highway authorities, which were not uniform. Consequently the powers of rural district councils in highway matters are not uniform. See note to s. 149.

Loans of rural council for highway purposes.

Although rural councils have succeeded to the powers of highway authorities under the Highway Acts, the M. of H. hold that any loans required for the purposes of those Acts should be raised, with the sanction of the Ministry under the provisions of the P. H. A., 1875. According to this view, the functions of the justices in quarter sessions under the Highway Act, 1864, s. 47, are superseded.

(c) The powers and duties of a surveyor of highways depend upon the Highway Act, 1835, and amending statutes. For further information on this subject, reference must be made to treatises on highway law, e.g., Pratt on Highways, 16th ed., by Mackenzie. One branch of the subject requires notice here, viz., that relating to the liability of an authority as surveyors of highways in cases of accident caused by non-repair, improper condition, or obstruction of the highways. The authorities are now applicable to the case of both urban and rural councils.

Mere non-repair not actionable.

A surveyor of highways was not liable to an action for injury caused by non-repair of the highways (Young v. Davis (1862), 26 J. P. 743; 7 H. & N. 760; affirmed in Exchequer Chamber (1863), 2 H. & C. 197). The ground of this decision was that the surveyor had no liability other than that which had previously existed in the case of the inhabitants of the parish. It had already been decided that when the duty, the neglect of which was the cause of action, was one attaching to the inhabitants of a county, the remedy was by indictment and not by action (Russell v. Men of Devon (1788), 2 T. R. 667); and it was held that the county surveyor merely took the place of the inhabitants for the purpose of suing and being sued, but without any further liability (Mackinnon v. Penson (1854), 9 Ex. 609; 18 J. P. 164). In Young v. Davis, supra, the same principles were held to govern the liability of the surveyor of highways.

In Hartnall v. Ryde Commissioners (1863), 27 J. P. 599; 4 B. & S. 361, town commissioners were held liable for an accident caused by their neglect of a duty imposed upon them in their corporate capacity by the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, s. 49; and in Ohrby v. Ryde Commissioners (1864), 28 J. P. 663; 5 B. & S. 743, where the accident arose from neglect of a similar duty imposed by s. 52 of that Act, they were also held liable. Hartnall v. Ryde Commissioners, supra, was distinguished by WILLES, J., in Parsons v. Vestry of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, infra, and by KELLY, C.B., in Wilson v. Halifax (Mayor of) (1868), L. R. 3 Ex. 117; 32 J. P. 230: see also Picton Municipality v. Geldert, p. 255, post; and even if it cannot be said to be overruled, its authority has been seriously shaken by the following decision of the Court of Appeal. By the L. Improvement Act, 1846, s. 36, the corporation were declared to be the surveyors of highways for the borough. By s. 37, the control of the streets was vested in them. By s. 38 they were empowered to form or pave streets with such materials as they should think fit. By s. 58 it was enacted that they should be liable to be indicted at common law for the want of sufficient repair of any highway in the borough in the same manner as any person or persons liable to the repair of such highways was or were before the passing of the Act. Whilst a horse and trap were being driven along a highway, the horse was injured owing to a hole in the roadway. There was no evidence of misfeasance, but the want of repair was admitted. In an action by the owner of the horse it was held that the liability imposed on the corporation by the Act of 1846 was a liability of the same nature as that placed on the inhabitants of a parish by the common law, which could only be enforced by the Crown by means of an indictment, and that the corporation were not liable to be sued by an individual for damages for non-feasance. The court pointed out that Hartnall's Case, supra, was decided upon a special statute, and said that since Cowley v. Newmarket L. B., infra, it is no longer law so far as it lays down a general proposition in regard to liability for nonfeasance where liability to repair highways is imposed by an Act of Parliament (Maguire v. Liverpool Corporation, [1905] 1 K. B. 767; 69 J. P. 153; and cf. Law v. Corporation of Glasgow (1916), 54 Sc. L. R. (2) 125).

The Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 90, contains provisions similar to that in the text transferring the liabilities of surveyors of highways to the metropolitan vestries. It was held, with reference thereto, that the vestries were under no greater liability than the surveyor would have been, and that an action would not lie against them for an accident caused by the non-repair of a highway (Parsons v. Vestry of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green (1867), L. R. 3 C. P. 56; 32 J. P. 55). In Lampard v. Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London (1884), 1 T. L. R. 114, the plaintiff sued in respect of injuries sustained through the defective condition of the pavement, due to the alleged negligence of the defendants. The alleged negligence consisted merely in non-repair, and it was held that he was rightly non-suited. And see Guardians of Holborn v. Vestry of St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (1876), 2 Q. B. D. 145, per LUSH, J.; Taylor v. St. Mary Abbotts, Kensington (Vestry of) (1886), 2 T. L. R. 668, per MANISTY, J.; and Newton v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green (Vestry) (1899), Times, March 29th. The pavement over a cellar in the metropolis has been held to be repairable as part of the highway (Hamilton v. St. George's, Hanover Square, post, p. 276).

In Nash v. Rochford R. D. C., [1917] 1 K. B. 384; 81 J. P. 57, it was held that the defendants could not be held liable for the misfeasance of a former highway authority not resulting in damage in their time, no such liability being passed on to them under the Local Government Act, 1894.

It was questioned in Wilson v. Halifax (Mayor of), p. 254, ante, whether a local board were liable to an action for injuries caused by non-repair of a highway; and it was expressly decided that they were not in Gibson v. Preston (Mayor of) (1870), L. R. 5 Q. B. 218; 34 J. P. 342; approved and followed in Cowley v. Newmarket L. B., [1892] A. C. 345; 56 J. P. 805.

See also on the subject of nonfeasance, Municipality of Pictou v. Geldert, [1893] A. C. 524; 56 J. P. 805; Gibraltar Sanitary Commissioners v. Orfila (1890), 15 App. Cas. 400; Sydney Municipal Council v. Bourke, [1895] A. C. 433; 59 J. P. 659; and Harbinson v. Armagh C. C., [1902] 2 I. R. 538.

Misfeasance actionable,

But nonfeasance in the sense of mere failure to keep in proper repair must be carefully distinguished from misfeasance, in respect of which an action will lie. Where a heap of stones was left by the side of a road without light, and the plaintiff, on a dark night, drove into it, and was injured, the heap having been left there by the negligence of persons employed by the local board to repair the roads, it was held that the board were liable to an action for the negligence of their servants, and that they were not exempt from liability by reason of the corresponding section of the P. H. A., 1848, which imposed on them the same duties and liabilities as a surveyor of highways had (Foreman v. Canterbury (Mayor of) (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 214; 35 J. P. 629). The principle of this decision may be thus briefly stated. A surveyor of highways was liable to a stranger for any act of personal negligence, or for the negligence of his own servants. The district council are in the same position, the only decision to the contrary, Holliday v. St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (1861), 11 C. B. (N.S.) 192, being overruled. See Mersey Docks v. Gibbs (1866), L. R. 1 H. L. 93, per BLACKBURN, J., at p. 119. See also per BRETT, L.J., in Glossop if no contributory negligence.

An authority may, of course, be relieved from liability if the plaintiff is guilty of contributory negligence, or if seeing the danger he deliberately runs the risk (Butterby v. Drogheda Corporation, [1907] 2 I. R. 134; Torrance v. Ilford U. D. C. (1909), 73 J. P. 225; 25 T. L. R. 355); and see also Charlesworth v. Darton U. D. C. (1915), 79 J. P. Newsp. 316, and Jones v. Westminster City Council, supra).

Distinction between nonfeasance and misfeasance.

The following cases show how narrow is the dividing line between what is nonfeasance and what is misfeasance. Appellants, who were both the highway and sanitary authority, dug a trench along a road under their control for the purpose of laying a sewer. When the sewer was laid they filled in the trench and opened the road for traffic. About a week after the road was thrown open the respondent was driving along it in a cab. The cabdriver found that the part of the road where the trench had been filled in was soft; he crossed to the off side to avoid that danger, and ran into a heap of rubbish which had been deposited by a wrong-doer upon that side of the road, with the result that the cab was overturned, and respondent suffered injuries. The appellants knew that the heap of rubbish had been deposited upon the road. The jury found that at the time of the accident the part of the road that had been filled in was dangerous for traffic. The House of Lords held that the appellants were liable on the ground that they were guilty of misfeasance in throwing open the road when it was not fit for traffic, and that such misfeasance was the cause of the accident (Shoreditch Corporation v. Bull (1904), 68 J. P. 415; 90 L. T. 210), semble, the capacity in which the appellants were acting was immaterial (ibid.). See especially the speech of Lord HALSBURY in this case, and the interpretation put upon it by the Court of Appeal in Dawson v. Bingley U. D. C., [1911] 2 K. B. 149; 75 J. P. 289; and see also Small v. Fermanagh C. C. (1914), 78 J. P. N. 366, and Warren v. Devon C. C. (1915), L. T. Journal, February 20th, where in an action in a county court the defendants were held to be liable for an accident caused by throwing open a road for traffic after tar spraying before the surface of such road was in a condition to receive the traffic.

In Parkinson v. W. R. County Council (1922), 20 L. G. R. 308, the defendants were also held liable for damages due to a road being prematurely thrown open to traffic after repairs not fully completed.

In Ryan v. Tipperary C. C., [1912] 2 I. R. 392, the defendants were repairing one half of a road and had left the other half open for traffic. The plaintiff, driving along this other half, collided with a large stone lying close to the grass margin opposite to the stream roller. The jury negatived contributory negligence. It was held that the act of the council in interfering with the road imposed on them the obligation of taking care that the portion left open for use was reasonably fit and safe, and that, the jury having found them to have been negligent in not removing the stone, they were liable in damages. See Walsh v. Mayo C. C. (1905), 39 Ir. L. T. 189, as to the respective liabilities of a county and district council in connection with the repair of a bridge. A plaintiff driving at night along a street in the defendants' district, drove over the edge of a ravine at the end of it. He alleged that the defendants were guilty of negligence in so laying out the street that it terminated in a ravine, without providing posts and fencing or placing a watchman or lights at the spot to give warning, and also that they had set a trap by reason that the lights in the street were in line with a lamp in W. street on the opposite side of the ravine so as to give the impression that the street was continuous. The road in question was dedicated to the public many years ago, and it was made up by the defendants as a street in the year 1903. The jury found that the street was dangerous; that the unfenced ravine was a trap; that when they made it up and opened it to the public as a street the defendants took no sufficient care to warn the public of the danger; that the public were invited by them to pass along the street as if it was continuous to W. street; and that the plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. It was held that as the defendants knew of the existence of the ravine, their leaving the road with a trap in it known to them and hidden from persons using the road at night was an actionable wrong and a breach of their duty to take reasonable care, assuming such a duty existed; that the defendants having made up the road, their omission to fence was not mere nonfeasance but misfeasance; that although when a road is dedicated as a highway, the public, or the road authority, take it as it is with all its defects, yet if a road authority undertake a duty with regard to it and make it up and open it to the public as a made-up street they must exercise due care and have due regard to the safety of those who will use it; and that the defendants, having exercised their powers, as the jury thought, negligently in such a way as to leave a hidden trap for persons passing along the road at night, exposing them to unnecessary and avoidable danger, were liable to the plaintiff. It was held, further, that the defendants having undertaken to light the street, and having done so negligently and inadequately, were also liable on this ground (McClelland v. Manchester Corporation, [1912] 1 K. B. 118; 76 J. P. 21). This was a judgment of LUSH, J., and in Moul v. Croydon Corporation (1918), 82 J. P. 283; 16 L. G. R. 595, certain passages in that judgment are explained by that same judge. In that case the plaintiff suffered damages from an accident caused by the swelling and bulging of the wood paving of a carriageway which caused the road surface to rise above its normal level. It was held that no distinction can be drawn between neglect to repair a road out of repair through ordinary wear and tear and neglect to repair a road in disrepair caused by the surface rising above its ordinary level. In Thompson v. Bradford Corporation and Tinsley, [1915] 3 K. B. 13; 79 J. P. 364, the decision in McClelland v. Manchester Corporation was followed. There the defendants were altering a street by throwing the footpath into the carriageway, and to do this it was necessary to remove a telegraph pole which existed on the footpath. The removal of the pole was done by the Post Office authorities, and in filling in the hole they did their work negligently, with the result that the plaintiff's steam wagon passing along the highway a few days later sank into the hole and the wagon was considerably damaged. It was held that both defendants were liable, the corporation upon the ground that they were altering the character of part of an old road (i.e., in effect making a new road), and their duty was to so make it that when they threw it open for public use it should be reasonably safe for the purpose for which it was intended to be used; the Post Office authorities upon the ground that having done, perhaps voluntarily, a piece of work, they did it negligently. Baldwin's, Ltd. v. Halifax Corporation (1916), 80 J. P. 357; 14 L. G. R. 787, was a case of damage by flooding of the plaintiffs' mills during a short period of exceptionally heavy rainfall. In 1867 the defendants obtained statutory powers to construct a road up a very steep and high bank along the base of which runs a stream upon which the plaintiffs' mills are situated. To ease the gradients the plan of the road is necessarily zig-zag in form. On the surface of the hill, especially on the lower slopes, there was a large amount of disintegrated shale caused by weathering and rain storms over a long period. The road was drained by a channel with catchpits at intervals discharging into an earthenware pipe sewer. The road planned and constructed in this way formed a catchwater which drained practically the whole of the hillside. During a very heavy rainstorm water and vast quantities of shale flowed over the road into the valley beneath and flooded the plaintiff's mills. It was held, on the ground of misfeasance, and not mere nonfeasance, that the defendants were liable, and that they had failed to exercise reasonable care in the construction and maintenance of the undertaking.

In Breen v. Tyrone C. C. (1908), 42 Ir. L. T. 250, an authority who had repaired the planking of a bridge with a defective board were held liable in respect of injuries to a horse, beneath which the board gave way. To lay a deep layer of broken stone across the full width of a road for a considerable distance, instead of rolling it in as the work proceeds, may amount to misfeasance (Torrance v. Ilford U. D. C. (1909), 73 J. P. 225; 25 T. L. R. 355). So, too, though to leave unfilled a hole which has appeared in a road is only nonfeasance, to fill it with improper material apparently, but not really, solid, may be misfeasance (Meeling v. St. Mary, Newington (Vestry) (1893), 10 T. L. R. 54).

An action was brought against a corporation to recover damages for injury sustained in consequence of the defendants negligently placing certain pitch or tar on a road, and negligently allowing the same to remain for an unreasonable time, whereby the road became uneven and dangerous. The plaintiff's mare had slipped on a pool of pitch or tar, which had, in consequence of hot weather, oozed up between the setts of wood or stone from the asphalte beneath. The road had been constructed a long time before the accident. A county court judge held that there was no evidence of misfeasance. It was held, on appeal, that as no evidence was given before him that the road had been improperly constructed, he was right in concluding that the accident did not arise from the misfeasance of the defendants (Holloway v. Birmingham Corporation (1905), 69 J. P. 358; 3 L. G. R. 878). In connection with the subject of wood paving the following decision as to the rights of adjoining owners may be noticed. A tramway company's special Act provided that the company should pave a certain road with wood; and they paved it with soft wood creosoted. There was another kind of wood paving consisting of hard wood blocks; but the company considered the creosoted wood more suitable to the locality. Dust and fumes from the creosoted wood caused damage to the plants in a market garden adjoining the road. It was held that the laying of creosoted wood blocks was a non-natural user of the land, and that the company were liable for the damage caused thereby to the market garden. As there were two kinds of wood paving and the company had laid that kind which caused damage, they were not protected by their special Act (West v. Bristol Tramways Co., Ltd., [1908] 2 K. B. 14; 72 J. P. 243). In Dell v. Chesham U. D. C., [1921] 3 K. B. 427; 85 J. P. 186, the drainage from the surface of a road was rendered impure by the tarspraying of the road surface. The drainage passed through a drain and flowed into and damaged certain watercress beds of the plaintiff. It was held that the defendants had power to spray the road, but that they could not justify the damage to the plaintiff without showing that it was a necessary consequence of the exercise of the power.

A vestry, acting as a sewer authority, laid down a new sewer, and their contractor in so doing, laid bare a wrought-iron service water-pipe, about two and a half feet below the surface. The surveyor of the vestry knew that the pipe was old and rusty, and likely, therefore, to become leaky. In filling in the trench some clay was put round the pipe, but not in such quantity or manner as to prevent it from leaking. A few months afterwards the pipe leaked, and the surrounding clay and earth, being thereby moistened, gave way under a van which the plaintiff was driving, and the van being overturned, the plaintiff was seriously injured. It was held that the vestry knew, or ought to have known, the character and condition of the pipe at the time when it was laid bare, and consequently were liable for negligence in not having taken special precautions against its leaking thereafter (Cox v. Paddington Vestry (1891), 64 L. T. 566). On the other hand an authority are not liable where some individual, not acting as their agent, interferes with a highway in laying a drain. C., the owner of certain cottages in a highway, received a notice from the defendants requiring him to connect them with the main sewer. In compliance therewith he dug a trench in the road and made the connection to the satisfaction of the defendants' surveyor, and he then filled up the trench. The soil afterwards subsided, and the subsidence caused an accident to the plaintiff while driving in a pony cart. The defendants were both the sewer authority and the highway authority: —Held, that the defendants were not liable as the sewer authority, on the ground that the notice did not constitute C. their agent, nor as the highway authority, on the ground that no action would lie against a local board for personal injuries arising from the non-repair of a highway (Steel v. Dartford L. B. (1891), 60 L. J. Q. B. 256).

It has been held to be nonfeasance only, and therefore not actionable, to allow the surface of a path to slip down into adjoining premises with the result that the path becomes dangerous (Short v. Hammersmith Borough Council (1911), 75 J. P. 82; 104 L. T. 70); to fail to clean out a highway drain into which roadside "grips" discharge (Irving v. Carlisle R. D. C. (1907), 71 J. P. 212; 5 L. G. R. 776); to fail to remove overgrowing grass from such grips (Masters v. Hampshire C. C. (1915), 79 J. P. 493; 13 L. G. R. 879; to fail to lop trees overhanging from an adjoining park owned by the authority (Tregellas v. London C. C. (1897), 14 T. L. R. 55), cf. Trinder v. G. W. Ry. Co. (1919), 35 T. L. R. 291, and Simon v. L. G. O. Co. (1907), 23 T. L. R. 463.

So, too, an authority are not liable for merely omitting to fence a dangerous ditch by the side of a highway (Wilson v. Halifax Corporation (1868), L. R. 3 Ex. 114; 32 J. P. 230). Where, however, a council pulled down a fence erected to guard a ditch by the side of the road, and had not replaced it, so that the place was dangerous in times of flood, and at such a time a man driving along the road at night drove into the ditch and was drowned, it was held that the district council, in an action against them under Lord Campbell's Act, were liable as for an act of misfeasance (Whyler v. Bingham R. D. C., [1901] 1 Q. B. 45; 64 J. P. 771).

Note to Section 144.

A corporation, who were the highway and lighting authority, erected a post in the centre of a footpath at the entrance thereto, to prevent cattle straying up the path, and near the post they placed a lamp, which they were in the habit of lighting at nights. The plaintiff was passing along the footpath at night, when the lamp was not lighted, and in consequence of the darkness came against the post, and was injured. It was held that an action lay (Lamley v. East Retford (Mayor, etc. of) (1891), 55 J. P. 133). And as to unlit or misleading lamps, see also Thurrold v. St. George's, Hanover Square, cited on p. 260, post; Donaldson v. Woolwich Corporation (1911), 75 J. P. N. 27, and McClelland v. Manchester Corporation, cited on p. 257, ante. During the recent war there were a number of cases where negligence was alleged by reason of the reduced lighting of public streets arising out of the restrictions required by the Defence of the Realm Orders. As to these see Brown v. Lambeth Borough Council (1915), 32 T. L. R. 61; Gt. Central Ry. Co. v. Hewlett, [1916] 2 A. C. 511; 80 J. P. 361; Morrison v. Sheffield Corporation, [1917] 2 K. B. 866; 81 J. P. 277; Baldock v. Westminster City Council (1919), 83 J. P. 98; 17 L. G. R. 190; Carpenter v. Finsbury Borough Council (1920), 84 J. P. 107.

A railway bridge spanned a road in the defendants' district. After the erection of the bridge the road was dedicated to the public, and it subsequently became vested in the defendants. At the time of dedication the road was higher at the entrance of the bridge than at the exit, and the road continued in a similar state up to the commencement of the action. The plaintiff, whilst driving under the bridge, met with an accident, his head coming in contact with the bridge in consequence of the road being higher at that part. In an action by him against the defendants for damages for injuries sustained, it was held that as the road was dedicated subject to this obstruction, the action could not be maintained (Warner v. Wandsworth District Board of Works (1889), 53 J. P. 471). See on the same point, Fisher v. Prowse (1862), 2 B. & S. 770. Where, however, in repairing a road under a bridge a ridge was improperly left in the surface, a driver, whose head was thereby brought into contact with the bridge, recovered damages against the authority (Hill v. Tottenham U. D. C. (1898), 79 L. T. 495; 15 T. L. R. 53).

In Brackley v. Midland Ry. Co. (1916), 80 J. P. 369; 14 L. G. R. 632, a railway company had voluntarily constructed a footbridge close to a station to supplement a level crossing. Although the footbridge was largely used by passengers to and from the station it did not connect different parts of the station, but had direct connection with the highway and was used as part of the same without interruption. In using the steps to the bridge at a time when snow had fallen, the plaintiff fell and sustained injuries. It was held that the footbridge had been dedicated to the public and that the defendants were under no duty to persons using it to maintain and cleanse it or clear away the snow.

An authority who had erected a drinking fountain in a highway were held liable for injuries caused by the fall of a stone displaced by a sightseer climbing thereon (McLoughlin v. Warrington Corporation (1911), 75 J. P. 57).

A householder, stepping out from his front door, put his foot on a piece of sandstone lying on the pavement and fell. Evidence was given that a heap of sandstone had been tipped by the defendants' servants in the roadway close to the kerb in front of the plaintiff's house, and that subsequently several stones were seen on the pavement. There was no barrier between the kerb and the stones. The plaintiff having been nonsuited, it was held that the nonsuit was wrong, for there was some evidence that the piece of sandstone was on the pavement by the action of the defendants' servants (Gould v. Birkenhead Corporation (1910), 74 J. P. 105). See also as to liability for obstacles left on a highway, cases in the succeeding paragraphs as to acts of contractors.

Authority's responsibility for contractors, servants, licencees, etc.

In Taylor v. Greenhalgh (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 487; 38 J. P. 599; (1876), 24 W. R. 311, and Pendlebury v. Greenhalgh (1875), 1 Q. B. D. 36; 40 J. P. 36, two cases arising out of one accident, it appeared that the defendant in each was a parish surveyor of highways appointed by the vestry at a salary. By a resolution of the committee of management it was ordered that a part of a road should be raised, and that the defendant should employ men to do it. He contracted with G. to do the work at so much per yard, the vestry finding the materials, but G. employing his own men. During the progress of the work one-half of the width of the road was raised first, and the other half left temporarily about a foot lower. No fence or light was put up to warn persons using the road, and the plaintiffs, driving at night, were upset and injured. The defendant had not personally interfered in doing the work, or in directing the road to be left as it was; and it was held by the Court of Queen's Bench that he was not liable to the plaintiffs either at common law, or by reason of the Highway Act, 1835, s. 56, the court holding that the persons whose negligence caused the accident were not servants of the defendant so as to bring him within Foreman v. Canterbury (Mayor of), ante, p. 255. But the Court of Appeal, taking a different view of the facts rather than of the law, directed judgment to be entered in each case for the plaintiffs. They did not decide whether the defendant would have been liable for his contractor's negligence, if he had employed him to do everything that was necessary; but they pointed out that, for the safety of the public, it was necessary that the work while in progress should be fenced and lighted at night, and that the defendant had only contracted for labour; therefore the duty of fencing and lighting remained on him, and he was responsible for negligence in performing this duty, whereby the damage was caused.

In Reid v. Darlington Highway Board (1877), 41 J. P. 581, a highway board finding that the wall of a bridge needed repair, instructed their surveyor to employ S., a contractor, to do the work. S. thereupon, by his servants, did the work, and the surveyor did not interfere. In the course of the work, S.'s servants left stones in the highway, which were not lighted at night, and R. drove into them, and was injured. It was held that there was no evidence upon which the board or its surveyor could be held liable for the injury to R. As to the liability of the contractor in such a case, see Blake v. Thirst (1863), 2 H. & C. 20, which may be compared with the previous case of Overton v. Freeman (1852), 11 C. B. 867.

A highway board directed a heap of stones to be placed on the side of a road, at a place which was used as a depôt for stones used in repairing. The carter, in placing the stones there, allowed them to project a few inches on to the road. A person driving along the road at night, drove against the heap and met his death. His widow and children thereupon brought an action under Lord Campbell's Act against the board. It was held that, inasmuch as the carter was really a servant of the defendants, and not a contractor, they were liable (Tucker v. Axbridge Highway Board (1888), 53 J. P. 87; 5 T. L. R. 26).

A metropolitan vestry caused a heap of sand to be laid in a street near a gas lamp which was lighted under contract by a gas company. The lamp, by accident, was not lighted one night, and the plaintiff drove into the heap and sustained injury. It was left to the jury to say whether the leaving of the heap unlighted was negligence, and the jury awarded damages (Thurrold v. St. George's, Hanover Square, Times, December 7th, 1898).

A gas company, in the repair of mains in a highway, placed a fire pail on which was a ladle containing molten lead on unenclosed land adjacent to a highway. A passer-by accidentally knocked over the fire pail at a time when the same was unattended and unguarded, and the plaintiff, a young child, was injured by the molten lead. It was held that the gas company was liable on the ground that what they were doing was dangerous unless precautions were taken to guard persons using the highway from the danger. Crane v. South Suburban Gas Co., [1916] 1 K. B. 33; 80 J. P. 51.

The rule deducible from the more recent decisions (see notes to s. 265, post, appears to be that where a contractor is employed to do work which will necessarily entail danger to the public unless proper precautions are taken, the authority employing him will be responsible if he fails to take such precautions, e.g., if he leaves the road improperly made up in ridges (Hill v. Tottenham U. D. C. (1898), 79 L. T. 495), or does not properly fill in and ram trenches (Gray v. Pullen (1864), 29 J. P. 69; 5 B. & S. 970; Thompson v. Bradford Corporation, ante, p. 257), or negligently breaks pipes laid in the road (Hardaker v. Idle U. D. C. (1896), 1 Q. B. 335; 60 J. P. 196), or leaves stones or material unguarded and unlighted on the highway (Penny v. Wimbledon U. D. C., [1899] 2 Q. B. 72; 63 J. P. 406; Clements v. Tyrone C. C., [1905] 2 I. R. 542; Lancaster v. West Ham L. B. (1886), 2 T. L. R. 820); and see also Pinn v. Rew (1916), 32 T. L. R. 451. And cf. Wilson v. Hodgson's Kingston Brewery Co. (1915), 80 J. P. 39; 32 T. L. R. 60, and Kimber v. Gas Light and Coke Co., [1918] 1 K. B. 439; 82 J. P. 125. On the other hand, for mere casual or collateral negligence of a contractor's labourer, e.g., leaving a tool on the road, the authority are probably not liable (Penny v. Wimbledon U. D. C., supra, per A. L. SMITH, L.J.).

As to the distinction between a contractor and servant, see, further, Steel v. S. E. Rail. Co. (1855), 16 C. B. 550; Reedie v. L. & N. W. Rail. Co. (1849), 4 Ex. 244; Holliday v. National Telephone Co., [1899] 2 Q. B. 392.

As to the liability of an authority for the acts of a licensee reference may be made to Gilbert v. Trinity House Corporation (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 795). They are not responsible for those of a person acting under independent statutory powers unless they are bound to supervise the work (Barham v. Ipswich Dock Commissioners (1885), 54 L. T. 23; Steel v. Dartford L. B., supra: Burrows v. City of London Sewer Commissioners (1888), 4 T. L. R. 262).

Penalty for obstruction.

A cart was damaged through contact with a heap of stones which had been allowed to remain after nightfall on a highway. The stones had been laid there by a carter who acted under the orders of a person to whom the surveyor of a local board had given general directions as to repairing the road; but the surveyor did not himself know that the stones had been laid on the road. It was held that the facts did not show any evidence of an offence by the surveyor within the meaning of the Highway Act, 1835, s. 56 (Hardcastle v. Bielby, [1892] 1 Q. B. 709; 56 J. P. 149). It seems to have been assumed in this case that the section would apply to a surveyor of a highway authority; but such is apparently not the case, the authority being themselves surveyors of highways within the meaning of the section. See R. v. Bradford, [1908] 1 K. B. 365; 72 J. P. 61.

Liability of council as sewer authority or water authority.

Although a district council are not liable for injuries sustained in consequence of their nonfeasance as surveyors of highways, there are cases where, by reason of their acting in other capacities, they may be liable for some negligent omission which occasions injury to persons using the highway. In one case, as the plaintiff was riding along a highway, under which was a sewer, his horse trod on a grid or grating, put there to drain the surface water off the highway into the sewer. The grid being in a defective state, gave way, and the horse's leg was injured. The plaintiff sued the local board, who were surveyors of the highways under the P. H. A., 1848, ss. 68, 117, and in whom the sewers were vested by ss. 43, 45 of the same Act. It was held that, though the defendants were not liable as surveyors of the highways, they were liable as owners of the sewer, of which the grid formed part, for negligence in not keeping the grid in a proper state (White v. Hindley L. B. (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 219; 39 J. P. 533). In another case, the defendants, who were the highway and the sewer authority, employed a contractor to construct a sewer under a highway within their district. The contractor dug a trench, which he afterwards filled in with earth, and the roadway was apparently made good. The work was done under the directions and to the satisfaction of the defendants' surveyor. Some months later a subsidence of the soil in the trench took place, without any assignable cause, leaving the road apparently sound. The plaintiff's horse, in consequence of the surface giving way, fell into the trench and was injured. It was held that there was evidence that the work of filling in the trench had been negligently and improperly done; that the defendants were liable as the sewer authority, and, perhaps, also as the highway authority (the latter liability apparently depending on the negligence of the defendants' surveyor, as in Pendlebury v. Greenhalgh, ante, p. 259) (Smith v. West Derby L. B. (1878), 3 C. P. D. 423; 42 J. P. 615). As to the liability of the contractor in such a case, see Hyams v. Webster (1868), L. R. 4 Q. B. 138; 31 J. P. 439. All, or nearly all, of the cases on the subject were reviewed in Borough of Bathurst v. MacPherson (1879), 4 App. Cas. 256; 43 J. P. 827, where a municipality in New South Wales were held by the Privy Council to be liable for an accident caused by a defective drain, the neglect to repair which had led to the falling away of the brickwork and the consequent formation of a dangerous hole in the road. The governing fact in this case was that the conduct complained of was, in the view of the Privy Council, misfeasance (per Lord HOBHOUSE in Municipality of Picton v. Geldert, [1893] A. C., at p. 531; and see Sydney Municipal Council v. Bourke, ante, p. 255, and Andrews v. Merton & Morden U. D. C. (1921), 43 R. C. 194 (a county court case). In such cases, however, it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove that there has been negligence on the part of the authority (Lambert v. Lowestoft Corporation, [1901] 1 K. B. 590; 65 J. P. 326).

Note to Section 144.

As to what amounts to proof of negligence when a sewer has given way and caused a subsidence, see ibid. and Hart v. St. Marylebone Borough Council (1912), 76 J. P. 257; 10 L. G. R. 502.

The predecessors of a district council in 1893 constructed a sewer with manholes under a main road repairable by the county. In 1906 the cover of one of the manholes projected above the granite setts surrounding it, and the setts projected above the surrounding surface of the roadway. The plaintiff when cycling was upset by the manhole, and he sued the council. The jury found that the manhole was defective and was the cause of the accident, and that the defects in the manhole were due to improper construction. The Court of Appeal held that there was no evidence of improper construction in the first instance, but ordered a new trial as to whether there had been negligence in maintaining the manhole (Winslowe v. Bushey U. D. C. (1908), 72 J. P. 259).

In Papworth v. Battersea Borough Council, [1916] 1 K. B. 583; 80 J. P. 177, a local authority had paved and made up a road in 1883. For the purpose of carrying away the surface water they had constructed a gully near the side of the road covered with a grating, but the grating and its framework caused a considerable depression in the road. The work however was done with due care and skill and in accordance with the usual method at the time. In June, 1912, the plaintiff, whilst cycling along the road and passing over the grating, owing to the excessive depression was thrown from her bicycle and sustained injuries. The jury found that the depression was dangerous to a careful cyclist, but that the local authority were not negligent in not having discovered the defect. It was held that as the local authority in the execution of their statutory powers had exercised due care and skill in the original construction of the grating and as they were not negligent in not having discovered the danger, they were not liable though the work turned out subsequently to be dangerous.

White v. Hindley L. B., ante, p. 261, was approved in Blackmore v. Vestry of Mile End Old Town (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 451; 47 J. P. 52. In that case a water meter, the property of a water company, and used for measuring the water supplied by them to the defendants, the vestry of a metropolitan parish, for watering the streets, was placed by the defendants in a box of theirs sunk in the footway of one of the streets, and covered with an iron flap. The defendants were surveyors of highways under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, s. 95, and were by s. 116 authorised to cause the streets in their parish to be watered. The plaintiff while walking along the street stepped on to the iron flap, and by reason of its having worn smooth and dangerous, he fell and was injured. It was held that although the defendants might not as surveyors of highways be liable for negligence in not keeping the flap in a proper state, they were liable in their capacity as the authority for watering the street, in which capacity they had placed the flap there. Where it is the duty of the consumer to maintain the necessary apparatus of water supply he is primâ facie liable if damage ensues arising out of its disrepair, thus in Mist v. Metropolitan Water Board (1915), 79 J. P. 495; 13 L. G. R. 874, the cover of a meter pit in the pavement was held to be part of the apparatus, and therefore the consumer was primâ facie liable. In another case the iron cover of a valve connected with a water main was properly fixed in a highway by the defendants, but in consequence of the ordinary wearing away of the highway, the valve cover projected an inch above it. The plaintiff's horse stumbled over the valve cover and was hurt. In an action against the defendants, who were both the water authority and the highway authority, for the injury to the horse, it was held that it was the duty of the defendants to make such arrangements that works under their care should not become a nuisance to the highway, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover (Kent v. Worthing L. B. (1882), 10 Q. B. D. 118; 47 J. P. 23). The last-mentioned decision was, however, questioned in Moore v. Lambeth Waterworks Co. (1886), 17 Q. B. D. 462, where it was held that a water company, authorised or required by Act of Parliament to maintain a water plug in a highway, is not liable in damages to a passer-by who falls over the plug by reason of the road having worn away round it, the plug itself being in good order. The Court of Appeal intimated that perhaps Kent v. Worthing L. B. could be distinguished on the ground that the defendants were both highway authority and water authority, but that, if not, it could not be upheld. And it was expressly overruled by the Court of Appeal on precisely similar facts in Thompson

v. Brighton (Mayor, etc. of); Oliver v. Horsham L. B., [1894] 1 Q. B. 332; 58 J. P. 297. See, further, as to accidents due to water plugs, the cases collected in notes to s. 66, ante, at p. 144.

A local authority, under the powers of the P. H. A., 1848, required the defendant's predecessor in title, together with other frontagers, to do certain work on a street which had since become a highway, and on default being made, did the work themselves and charged the expenses to the frontagers. The work included the laying of two sloping iron carriage plates over the gutter between the roadway and the footway to facilitate the passage of horses and carriages from the roadway to the stables of two of the houses, one of which now belonged to the defendant. The two carriage plates did not meet by a few inches, thus leaving a small hole into which the defendant stumbled. This hole was opposite the defendant's house. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for damages for personal injuries, it was held that the carriage plates formed part of the highway, which was vested in the local authority, and that the defendant was not liable (Jones v. Rew (1910), 79 L. J. K. B. 1030; 74 J. P. 321). In Horridge v. Makinson (1915), 79 J. P. 484; 84 L. J. K. B. 1294, the defendant was the owner of a house abutting upon a street which had been made up and declared a public highway. In the lower part of the wall of the house there was an opening into a coal shoot, and the local authority, by raising the level of the footpath, covered the lower portion of this opening. To admit of access thereto, however, they left an opening next the wall in the footpath and did not put any grating or cover over this opening. The plaintiff, whilst passing along the footpath, fell into this opening and sustained injuries. It was held that the defendant was not liable, the hole amounted to a nuisance but it was left by the local authority and the defendant could not be said to have permitted the continuance of the nuisance. And see Wilson v. Hodgson's Kingston Brewery Co. (1915), 80 J. P. 39; 85 L. J. K. B. 270. In that case the defendants were sued for damages for personal injuries to the plaintiff, who passing along a pavement adjoining the defendant's premises, tripped over flaps to a cellar grating which had been negligently left open and fell into the cellar. The cellar grating was open to receive delivery of barrels of beer, which delivery being made by an independent contractor and not under the defendant's orders, it was held that the defendants were not liable to the plaintiff.

Liability for breach of agreement under the Tramways Act, 1870.

A corporation are liable for damages caused by non-repair of a road which they have agreed to repair under s. 29 of the Tramways Act, 1870 (Howitt v. Nottingham Tramways Co. (1883), 12 Q. B. D. 16). Some doubt was cast upon that decision by the Court of Appeal in Steward v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 556; 50 J. P. 324, but this was removed by Alldred v. West Metropolitan Tramways Co., [1891] 2 Q. B. 398; 55 J. P. 824, and Barnett v. Mayor, etc. of Poplar, [1901] 2 K. B. 319.

Indictments for non-repair of highways.

In R. v. Poole (Mayor, etc. of) (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 602; 52 J. P. 84 (where the earlier cases were discussed), an indictment against a municipal corporation for non-repair of a highway alleged that the highway was in decay, and that the corporation "acting by the council as the sanitary authority for the urban district" ought to repair and amend the same, etc., but there was no allegation to show how the defendants were liable, nor did the indictment conclude "against the form of the statute." At the trial the judge intimated his willingness to make any amendment within his power, but no amendment was in fact made. After a verdict for the Crown, it was held:—(1) that the indictment was bad, and that the defendants were entitled to judgment non obstante veredicto; (2) that even assuming the necessary amendments to be made, the defendants were entitled to judgment, there being nothing in the P. H. A., 1875, to make the urban sanitary authority liable to indictment for non-repair in the same sense as that in which the parish or persons liable ratione tenuræ were liable. In a subsequent case, however, it was held that an indictment would lie under the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 10, against an urban sanitary authority acting as the highway authority for non-repair of a highway, for the section in question provides a statutory mode of raising the question of the authority's liability to repair (R. v. Wakefield (Mayor, etc. of) (1888), 20 Q. B. D. 810; 52 J. P. 422). In R. v. Morse, [1904] W. N. 114, it was held that the procedure under s. 95 of the Highway Act, 1835, has not been impliedly repealed by the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 10, and accordingly a rule nisi for a certiorari, asked for on the ground that the proper parties to be indicted were a rural district council, whose funds were liable to bear the expense of the repairs, was discharged. In R. v. Shipley Parish Council (1897), 61 J. P. 488; 13 T. L. R. 486, an endeavour was unsuccessfully made to indict a parish council for non-repair of a highway.

No indictment for manslaughter by non-repair.

Trustees liable under a local Act to repair a road were held not liable to be indicted for manslaughter for the death of a person in consequence of an accident caused by the non-repair of the road (R. v. Pocock (1851), 17 Q. B. 34).

Compromise of indictments.

The plaintiffs, a local board, had preferred an indictment against the defendants for interfering with a public road. At the trial of the indictment, an agreement for compromise was made between the solicitors, and sanctioned by the judge, and it was afterwards confirmed by a deed executed by the plaintiffs and defendants. By this deed the defendants covenanted to restore the road, which they had broken up, within seven years, and the plaintiffs covenanted that, when this had been done, they would consent to a verdict of "not guilty" on the indictment. The defendants having failed to restore the road, the plaintiffs sued them on their covenant, claiming specific performance and damages:—Held, that as the indictment was for a public injury, the agreement to consent to a verdict of "not guilty" was against public policy and illegal, and that the plaintiffs could not maintain an action on the defendants' covenant. The court maintained the view taken in Keir v. Leeman (1846), 9 Q. B. 371; and refused to follow the dictum of JAMES, L.J., in Fisher & Co. v. Apollinaris Co. (1875), L. R. 10 Ch. D., at p. 302 (Windhill L. B. v. Vint (1890), 45 Ch. D. 351).

Liability for altering level of highway.

Where a local authority acting as surveyors of highways occasion damage to any person, they are not liable to compensate him under s. 308, post. In Burgess v. Northwich L. B. (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 264; 45 J. P. 256, it appeared that a highway had subsided owing to brine-pumping operations, and the houses abutting on it had subsided also. The surface of the road remained continuous, so that traffic could still pass along it; but a hollow was formed, and the road at its new level was liable to be flooded so as to render traffic impossible. The defendants placed materials on the road, so as to raise the surface at the point of the lowest subsidence about four feet higher than at the commencement of the work. The plaintiffs raised their houses simultaneously and claimed compensation for the expense of so doing. It was stated as a fact in the case that, having regard to the obstruction by floods, the raising of the road was reasonably necessary to put the road into a proper state for traffic; but excluding the consideration of floods, the raising to the extent described was not necessary to put the road into a proper state. It was held that, as the highway was vested in the defendants (s. 149, post, p. 273), no action of trespass could have been maintained by the plaintiffs, even if more materials had been placed on the road than a surveyor of highways could justify; that the plaintiffs had no right to have the road maintained at the level to which it accidentally and recently sank; that the works of the defendants were not done "in exercise of any of the powers" of the Act within s. 308, which mean powers created by the Act, and not merely powers transferred by s. 144 from the surveyor to the local board, but were done, if not entirely in pursuance of their duty as surveyors of highways, at all events in exercise of such powers as surveyors of highways have; and consequently that the plaintiffs were not entitled to compensation (cf. also Atherton v. Cheshire C. C., on p. 281, post). The decision in Burgess v. Northwich L. B. seems to follow a dictum of BRAMWELL, L.J., in Nutter v. Accrington L. B., post, p. 282. In a later case a road had subsided, and was partially restored not long afterwards. The road having been again raised forty years later, BOWEN, L.J., held that the burden of proof was upon the local board to show that they had simply restored the road to its original level, and in the absence of evidence, held that they were acting under the powers given by the P. H. A., 1875, and were liable to make compensation accordingly (Pearsall v. Brierley Hill L. B. (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 735; 47 J. P. 628; affirmed (1884), 9 App. Cas. 595; 49 J. P. 84), and see also Rochford v. Essex C. C. (1916), 85 L. J. Ch. 281; 14 L. G. R. 33, where the highway authority were held liable for the damage to a fence caused by the additional earth pressure thereon as the result of raising the level of highway.

In Hoare v. Kingsbury U. D. C., [1912] 2 Ch. 452; 76 J. P. 401, a building owner, on depositing plans for the erection of houses, entered into an agreement with the council whereby he agreed to throw a strip of land into an adjoining highway, and the council agreed to make up and adopt such strip. It was held that the agreement was one for the widening of a highway made by the council, not as the highway authority, but as an urban authority under s. 154 of this Act, and that consequently s. 174, post, p. 397, applied to it. Cf. also Arnott v. Whitby U. D. C., cited on p. 283, post.

Right and duty to repair, remove obstructions, etc.
